Junior Samantha Barb anxiously waits as the nurse cleans her arm so she can take her blood. In the first blood drive of the year, there were over 200 donors, and during the second semester, the school held two blood drives in which the first had 146 successful donors.

the school year impacted our lives . . .

leave your own legacy

Impact: the effect or influence of one person, thing or action on another. A lot of events and people throughout history have left considerable impact, evidence of their existence, on "this little town of ours." Whether it be a scratched signature on an old wooden desk, an athletic award in the Hall of Fame or a random irremovable mark on the wall of the upstairs "G" hallway, the fact remains that each of these symbols has a story to tell, a lesson that needs to be learned. If the students of Warren Central would just open their eyes, they would become aware of a whole new world of past memories, inside jokes and experiences that could enlighten, inspire and impact their lives.

Hurricane Katrina. Three-peat football state championships. Cross-Country state championship. The Food Drive. Ed-Tracker. New Cafeterias. The year 2005-2006 had several dominant events that rose as symbols of our lives, what we experienced, what we went through and what we learned.

One of the most tragic impacts that affected the school year came in the form of a natural disaster. Hurricane Katrina raged into the southern coast in late August, devastating houses, lives and families. Warren Central, along with many other high schools across the country, got the opportunity to play host to several transfer students from New Orleans whose schools were totally destroyed, opening its doors to give them an education from our state-of-the-art facility for as long as they needed.

The Warrior Nation once again dominated the football fields delivering our third annual state championship title for the first time in Warren Central history. The boys cross-country team also dominated taking their own state title, once again leading this little town into the spotlight. The team got the opportunity to travel to Oregon for the Nike Team Championships, representing our town on the national level, placing 15th out of the 20 best teams in the nation.

The annual food drive once again reigned successful, the goal for this year being 25,002, one can more than last year.

Along with the new school year came a new grading and attendance system, now known to students and faculty as the dreaded Ed-Tracker system. The school year started with teachers not being able to take attendance, midterms coming out late with grades that were either missing or incorrect, and some teachers even giving out hand-written report cards to ensure the parents got the correct information.

Warren also experienced a major change in the cafeterias this year. The cafeterias were completely remodeled and the Warrior Nation now gets food from a catering service in a "food court-esque" feel. Students experienced an increase in food prices, but hand-in-hand with that came an increase in food quality.

As another class walks down the aisle at Conseco, the time comes for reflection and consideration on what kind of impact you want to leave. Don't get lost amidst the thousands of bodies that go in and out of the doors of this school every year. Leave your own legacy.

Warren has definitely gone through its fair share of changes this year, but we can only hope that as all traditions eventually become a part of the past, these new traditions will leave an impact that the 2005-2006 students will never forget.

singing in the spotlight

"She loved like he was the last man on earth/ gave him everything she ever had," were the first words from the song "Broken Wings" by Martina McBride that junior Holly Mahurin belted out Wednesday night at the Star Search competition.

"The song Broken Wing is a favorite of mine so I practiced a lot ahead of time," Holly said.

Holly placed first in the overall competition doing something that was not just a one-time performance.

"I've been in choir since elementary school and I've been in numerous talent shows," Holly said. "I've been in various competitions including karaoke at country music expo and I got fourth place in the county fair competition."

Holly was just one of many talented acts the graced the stage that night, all of who had a passion for music including Zach Green who placed second place with his piano solo.

"I really enjoyed being a judge during the competition, Holly was spectatular," sophomore Alyssa Agnelneri said, "Country music is not something generally assoctiated with Warren Central and Star Search, so it was a nice change for once."

"The competition made me very proud and self-confident," Holly said, "The crowd was amazing, and without singing, I'd be lost.

no flashes allowed

With a theme of "warrior victory photo shoot: No Flashes Allowed," the entire school was pumped up with spirit as they got ready for the weeks events that led up to the game against the Franklin Central Flashes.

Throughout Winterfest Week, Student Council puts on several events for all students including Battle of the Brains, Battle of the Biceps, Lip Sync, the Winterfest game and dance, and Banner Decorations, which was put on for the first time ever this year.

The Battle of the Biceps competition was an event where any student had the opportunity to compete in an arm wrestling battle. There were no qualifications or restrictions to Battle of the Biceps; any Warren Student (or even teacher) was able to sign up.

"Battle of the Biceps was an awesome way to get everyone at Warren involved. I loved this event because it got a variety of different people together that may not have had the opportunity to participate in competitions such as this before," said one of the chairpersons for this event, senior Erica McCasland.

Among the many competitors were crowd favorites Erica McCasland as the "Lurky Turkey," Chris Adkins as the "Adkins Diet," Joey Hodges as "Big Mama," and Ashley Oliver as "Spider Babe."

Dressed as a large woman in a brightly colored yellow dress, "Big Mama" was more than ready for the competition. Regardless of not winning it all, competing and having fun was all "Big Mama" was really looking for.

"I thought I was going to win, but I got killed. I thought it would be fun and what motivated me was that I wanted to participate in all senior and other activities. I wanted to go out with a big bang," senior "Big Mama" Joey Hodges said.

"In my weight class, my rank is number one out of all the girls. I wanted to show the school my strength. My motivation is when boys tend to think they're stronger than girls," senior Ashley Oliver said.

Tamario Morris was able to win the boys division and Gloria Cho for the girls. After the male and female winners were determined, the two went for one last match where with Gloria as the champion.

"I thought it was a great experience to dominate," winner Gloria said.

Jack's mother (Heather Weinman) tells her son Jack (Stephen Koch) that he cannot keep his cow "Milky White" and that he must sell it to the market. Milky White was Jack's best friend and although he followed his mother's instructions and sold the cow, he was determined to buy it back by the end.

into the woods and they all lived happily ever after...

Have you ever wondered what happens after the age-old "happily ever after" closing to the fairy tales of childhood? If given the opportunity would you discover the truth? Those who dared gathered in the PAC to watch as the cast of this year's musical "Into the Woods" span their tale...

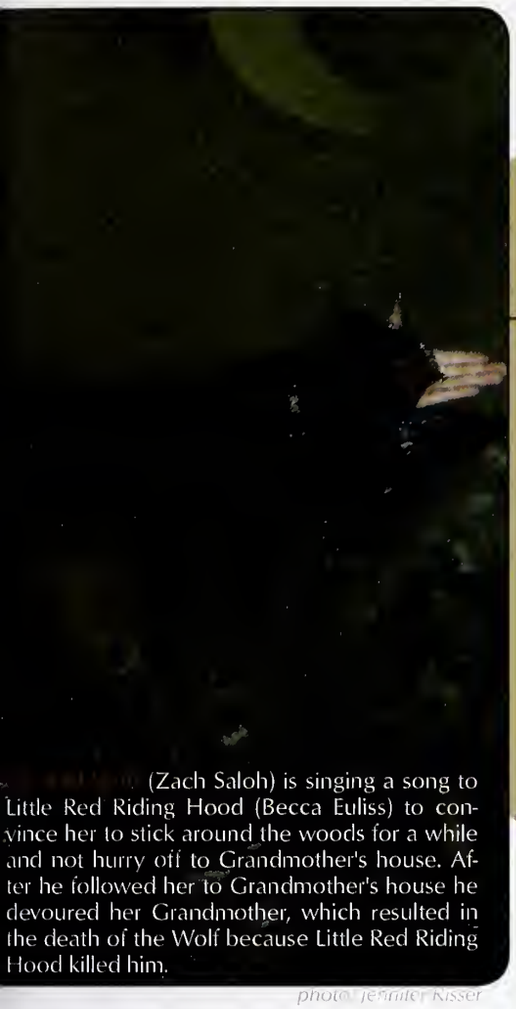
Beginning with three different points of view that merged as the characters' stories became intertwined, the audience followed Cinderella, Jack, and the Baker on their misadventures to achieve their happily ever after's and later in the play, defend them. Sophomore Stephen Koch and senior Heather W[illegible]man as Jack and his mother, respectively, portrayed two of the main roles in the musical.

"I wasn't very familiar with 'Into the Woods', so I hadn't heard of Jack's Mom," said Heather. But after the first rehearsal Heather was more than ready to tackle the role. "I realized how funny and [illegible]er) was. I was so excited to play her."

'Into the Woods' was a very [illegible] to Heather. "It wasn't my first performance, but it was my first role." After being a chorus member in two of Warren's other theater productions and a member of show choir, the senior had become comfortable with the stage but that was not [illegible] of being in the spotlight. "It was such a rush! It's the best feeling to work on something so hard and so long and then finally be able to show off the final product."

"I haven't had as much past experience as others, but what I have had has taught me so much," said Stephen. No stranger to the stage, Stephen was tailor-made for the role of young Jack. "I think seeing how other people connect with their roles has made me feel more motivated to perform so much better."

"It taught me to be myself and have fun at things I love doing the most," was Stephen's response to the impact this play has had on him. While we must all venture into the unknown once and awhile the experiences we have and the people we grow to love never leave us. Heather closed by stating, "I'll definitely miss the closeness of the group! Everyone in the cast was so talented and being able to work with them was so much fun!"



[illegible] (Zach Saloh) is singing a song to Little Red Riding Hood (Becca Euliss) to convince her to stick around the woods for a while and not hurry off to Grandmother's house. After he followed her to Grandmother's house he devoured her Grandmother, which resulted in the death of the Wolf because Little Red Riding Hood killed him.

(above)Little Red Riding Hood (Becca Euliss), Cinderella (Tamesha Moore) and the Witch (Jessica Murphy) fight over Jack (Stephen Koch) to decide if he will be fed to the giant (Justine Miller) or not. When everything came down to it, they decided it was Jack's fault that the giant was in their land, and he must be fed to it in order for the town to return to normal.

(left)The witch (Jessica Murphy), the Baker (Brandon Arnold) and the Baker's Wife (Whitney Dennis) have the ingredients the witch asked for in order to remove the curse from their family. noises off students tackle a play within a play

Off-stage romances. Sardines that are lost, found and lost again. Cast members falling down and up the stairs on purpose. Love triangles. In more ways than one, "Noises Off," by Michael Frayn, was an unprecedented choice for the Warren Central drama department to select for the winter play.

"[I chose this play because] it is a difficult one to put on, and if anyone could do it, it would be Warren," director Mr. Gabe Huddleston said, "Noises Off' is probably the most slapstick comedy we've ever done."

"Noises Off" was a play within a play.

"The play slowly breaks down from rehearsal to final production," Mr. Huddleston said, "It was a very funny play with a lot going on. [The audience] would have probably needed to see it twice so that they didn't miss anything."

With three acts and two intermissions, "Noises Off" took about two and a half hours to perform. Each act represented a different time in the play's process; Act One was the final dress rehearsal, Act Two was opening night and Act Three was the second performance. The drama and comedy increased with each new act.

Over 100 people auditioned to get a part in "Noises Off."

"I'm always surprised at auditions. There are always people who you didn't even know existed, who impress you," Mr. Huddleston said.

"I was extremely nervous at auditions because a lot of talented people auditioned. I really didn't think I'd get a part," Kathie Biggers, who played Poppy, said, "I tried out for this play because I like being able to talk in an English accent. Usually if I start talking in an accent, the people around me look at me weird."

After the intense auditions and callbacks, there was a final cast of nine. Mr. Huddleston couldn't help to be anything but pleased.

"Warren [performers] are the best in the state! We tackle plays that are usually reserved for college students," Mr. Huddleston said.

The performers stayed after school nearly everyday to practice their parts and do everything they could to make the play a success.

"My favorite part about directing the play was seeing the talented students onstage everyday," Mr. Huddleston said.

The admiration of the Warren performers by the directors is more than mutual. According to Kathie, "The Warren directors are wicked awesome!"

With practices nearly every day, there were bound to be funny stories. According to Mr. Huddleston, during one practice a student fell up the stairs and another student laughed so hard at him that she peed her pants.

Even with the complex plot line, difficult accents and possible risk of injury, the Warren actors/actresses carried through, delivering one of the best plays the Warren community has seen in a long time.

"The play was a wonderful experience and I truly enjoyed every minute of it. I'm really lucky that my "debut" was in such a great production with such an amazing cast. There were laughs, tears, bodily injury and partial nudity. All in all, it was a good show and the audience left happy," Kathie said.

Lloyd Dallas (James Worrell) tells Tim Allgood (Zach Saloh) to order spare murder costumes when the unreliable Selsdon Mowbray (Ace Cutshaw) goes missing. Selsdon often disappeared, causing much stress for the cast within a cast.

Dotty Otley (Becca Euliss) violently shoves Belinda Blair (Melinda Kashner) during a "backstage" catfight. Director Mr. Huddleston gave them full rights to make it believeable, no matter how much it hurt them or Frederick Fellows (Pete Estes), the man they were fighting over.

Founder of Real Inspirations, Inc, Keith Hawkins, keynote speaker at the junior/ senior leadership retreat, tells the students people look at what you do, not what you say. All the students stayed together this year instead of breaking up into groups, which created high energy with the speaker. Keith had students participate in many icebreakers and challenged them to go outside of their comfort zones.

junior speaks out to teens on violence

Teenagers respond better to those whom they can relate, i.e. other teenagers who share similar experiences.

Keith Turner, although only 18, is doing his part to calm violence among teens. He is the president of the Youth National Council of Weed & Seed, which umbrellas over 300 groups throughout the United States. They sponsor youth rallies and positive drug-free parties. He is also a member of one of Mayor Bart Peterson's junior councils. Earlier this year, Keith spoke at a town meeting in Wayne Township on ways to reduce teen violence.

He suggested getting youths off the streets and into community centers. He wants other teens to find positive outlets like he does.

He also challenged adults to stop complaining about teen irresponsibility, and actually start acting on it.

"To me, my generation is important. But it seems like they've given up on us. A lot of kids don't know this, but the government [throws] money at anybody young that wants to do anything positive. For the most part, they think we're a lost cause. But I want to prove them wrong. There's a lot of positive from us, that we can make a change. We can make it better than it is right now."

Keith has done numerous acts of charity work in attempts at conflict resolution—he starts by trying to prevent the conflict altogether. Keith explained that teenagers just need a positive influence—a push in the right direction—and that's what most aren't receiving.

Most youths don't realize the consequences of their actions, according to Keith and Prosecutor Staton. They know what they're doing while performing the actions, but don't think it out all the way. "They don't think of all the possibilities of what can happen, and that's what they need to do," said Keith desperately.

overworked

balancing working and school work

It's Friday night, the phones are ringing off the hook; there are pizzas to be made; senior Becky Khmaszewski runs the show due to her status of most senior insider at Domino's Pizza. Becky has worked at Domino's since November of her junior year, and still has fun every time she goes to work. Several other Warren students work part-time jobs at Domino's, and many students at Warren have some sort of employment for extra cash.

Becky realized early on that she wanted to attend college, and knew that with the word "college" came the word "money." There were also the everyday costs of being a high school senior (gas money, fast food with friends, Saturday night movies) and having a job, even one that started at a measly $6 per hour added up to be enough.

Becky struggled through the pressures of working 20-25 hours a week at Domino's, and during the Christmas season, even attempted a second job working retail at Kohl's Department Store. When she started having to juggle working 45 hours a week between her two places of employment, as well as 40 or more hours at school, and homework on top of that, she knew she had to give something up, besides sleep, which had flown out the window weeks beforehand.

"The money was great, but I was always so stressed out, I couldn't handle it anymore," Becky said.

She found that even though she had the money, she didn't have enough time to do her fun senior things. "I didn't even have a social life anymore. My friends knew not to call me because I worked one of my jobs every night, and usually both on the weekend days."

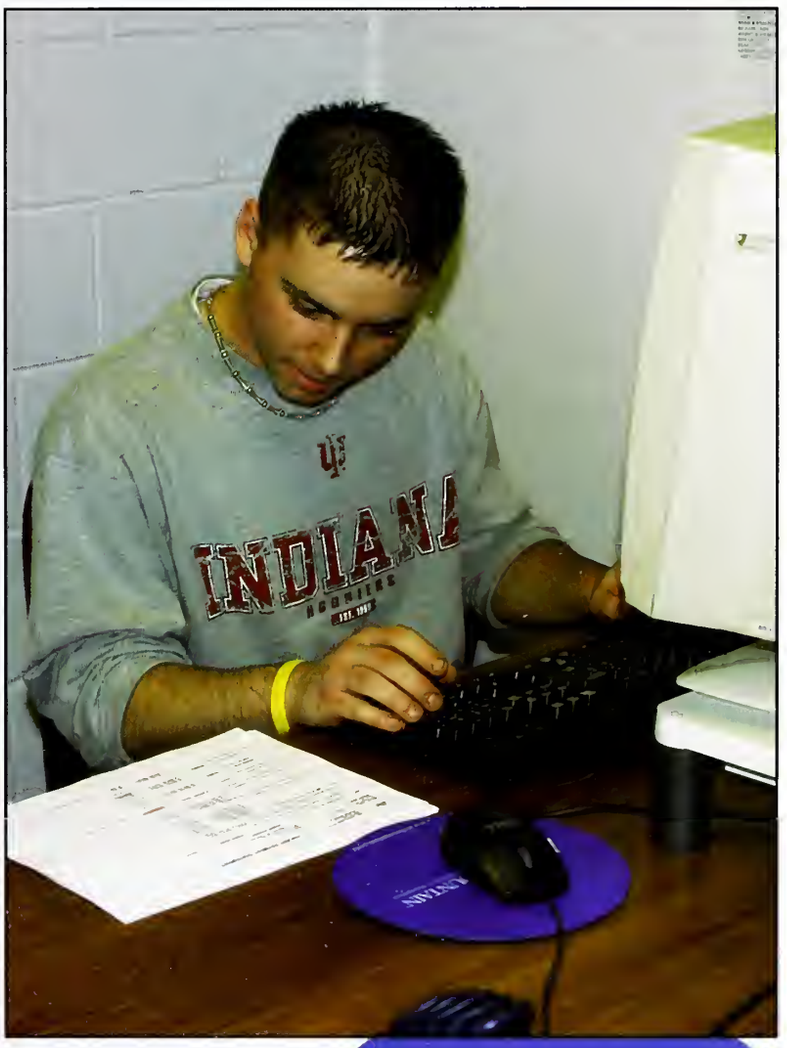
She decided to quit her job at Kohl's, and in doing so, was able to move up to a higher position at Domino's. "I got a raise and a promotion, and the rest of my life started going a lot more smoothly," she said. She was able to raise her grades which had started falling, and her friends started calling her to do things on the weekends again.

"I actually like working," Becky concluded, "but I know to put my schoolwork first."

Working as a cashier at Wal-Mart, senior Ramell Key pays a little bit more in bills a month than the average high school student. Ramell lives by himself in his own apartment, which he pays all the bills. He pays $450 a month for rent along with a light bill, phone bill, and groceries of course. Ramell also works at Wendys as a junior shift leader and cashier to pay for all of his monthly expenses.

During a busy rush on a Friday night, Seniors Becky Klimaszewski and Stephanie Epps dress a pizza for a delivery order. Some of the duties at Domino's were making pizzas, answering phones, taking walk-in orders, and cleaning. Both girls balanced working with school work and the many extra-curricular activities they were involved in, which for them meant field trips out of state.

"I work at Ritter's to save money for college. I don't want to have to work my freshman year of college so I figured I would start saving now."
-Khristina Bell



At his job at Burd Ford Dealership, junior Daniel Hibbert types in account information. Daniel made about $8-10 per hour depending on what work he was doing on a given day. Some of his duties as an associate included account payments, dealer trades, and deposits.

the emerson

the story behind the theatre and who goes there in their free time

The line waiting to enter the Emerson isn't just fans of the performing bands about to perform, but members of other bands, who want their chance to play in front of a crowd while the fans watch their favorite bands perform. They watch the performances trying to learn new techniques for their road to discovery.

The Emerson Theater serves as a home to many local bands such as Brenan and Seven Degrees From Center and a tour spot for big-name bands like Black Eyed Peas and Emery.

"Saturday shows at the Emerson almost always have great bands playing, and it ranges from huge bands like Blindside and the Used, to smaller bands like mewithoutyou, to local bands like Brenan and Seven Degrees From Center," explained senior Justine Miller, who is a regular attendee of the Emerson.

Many teens head to the Emerson either to perform or support their friends who are performing. A typical show runs about $7 for four or five local bands.

Walking into the Emerson, it may not seem appealing with all-black walls, broken fans and torn cushioned bench seats sitting against the walls. But when the lights dim, and after the bands start to play, the focus is taken off the appearance and put onto the band performing.

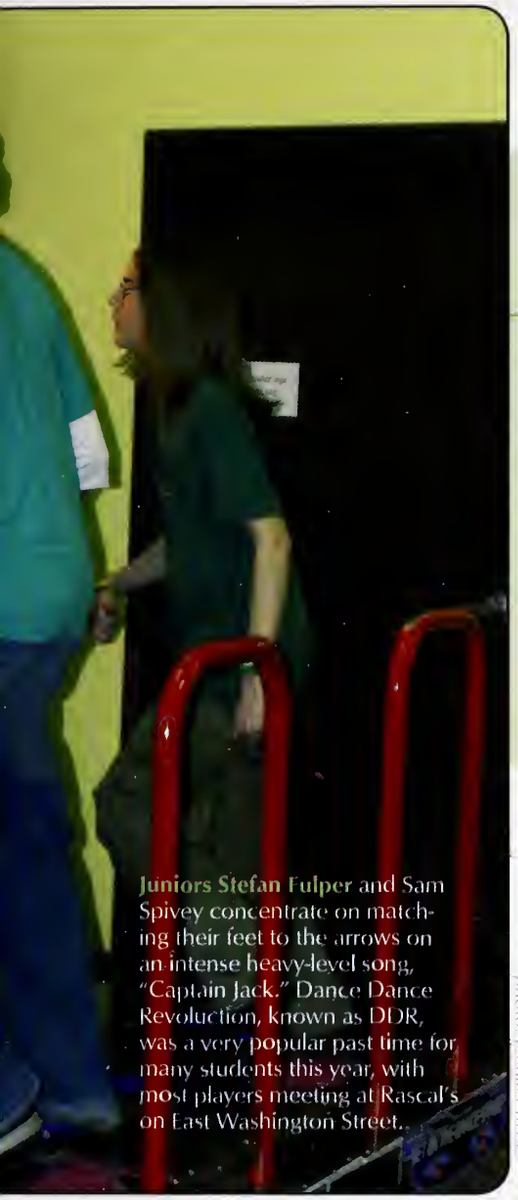
Bands sell their merchandise to friends and fans. Typical merchandise includes CDs, demos, T-shirts, stickers and buttons. This allows bands to raise money to record more music, get new equipment, or go on tour.

If a show is going to be big or include big-name bands, tickets are pre-sold through Kulture Entertainment online at kultureentertainment.com or at Indy CD and Vinyl in Broad Ripple.

"I like going to see a band and seeing another band there that I have never heard. It is like going for a sour patch kids and getting the red one," junior Max Skillman exclaimed.

Once teens go to the Emerson, most of them go back; some go back to support friends and some to see big bands at a cheap price.

"I wanted to see a band, [but] I saw more that I liked and it was like an addiction; I needed more," sophomore Dylan Leonard stated.



Juniors Stefan Fulper and Sam Spivey concentrate on matching their feet to the arrows on an intense heavy-level song, "Captain Jack." Dance Dance Revolution, known as DDR, was a very popular past time for many students this year, with most players meeting at Rascal's on East Washington Street.

The team with the fastest time in all events, the Sparkle Team, won.

Annual Olympics

brought to you by the class of '06

Senior week this year consisted of similar events and dress up days as in years before, however the class of 2006 made it seem more different than ever. From the dress up days where students were found dressing up as boy scouts, Olympians and even guys dressing up as girls, the senior class wanted to make sure they stood out from the rest of the school.

With events including Senior Finales, the Senior Skating Party, and the Senior Luncheon, Senior Olympics seemed to be the most popular this year with 16 participating teams. Seniors took the opportunity to get a team together, make crazy team shirts, and compete with their peers. Due to the high volume of participants, however, this year's competition only consisted of three events: moving each team member through a hula hoop without using their hands, carrying a ping pong ball on a large plastic spoon and tying a cloth diaper to teammates and then racing from one end of the gym to the other.

"Basically we just went out and had fun. We tried to come up with strategies, but when it actually came down to the event, we just went as fast as we could, and it worked," Jenny Lewis, member of third place team, "Strawberries and Napkins" said.

Some teams came out with strategies while others simply acted silly and had fun. The competition wasn't really a competitive one, however with several teams obviously cheating. One team stuck gum to their ping pong ball in order for it to stay on the spoon while another team simply tied on the diaper instead of using the required safety pin. Cheating teams weren't disqualified since everyone was just having a good time with their teams, no one was really cheating to win, just cheating to be silly.

"A few of the games weren't going our way, so we had to improvise and as long as the judges didn't catch us, it was all right," Allan-Michael Bills, member of Team "06 Finest," admitted.

Through the long night of over 100 seniors running around in team uniform, The Sparkle Team, came out on top with the fastest times in all three events.

edtracker fails warren

system causes chaos for students, staff

With a huge leap of faith that ended up as a huge disappointment, Warren Township implemented EdTracker this year, the computer system in charge of grades, attendance and supposedly a variety of up-coming web-based systems. As teachers prepared to enter grading period, semester and final grades, the questions arose over whether the new product will function as it was intended. After incorrect mid-terms and messed up report cards, students were forced to worry about whether or not their grades would even appear on their report cards, as well as if they would be accurate.

Since Skyward, Warren Township's previously used program was running out of its contract, the technology department began to search for a replacement. While this $1.18 million investment, which will be spread over three years seemed to fit what the township wanted, but has done little to positively impact those who matter most: teachers, parents, and students.

Teachers were frustrated with the time- consuming attendance process and the entering and re-entering of grades. "It's just not working," said one teacher in complete consternation over one of the most frustrating semesters since working at Warren, "and at this point, it really seems likey it might never work."

At the beginning of the year parents were mailed a letter explaining EdTracker's three-year process, however, this was the first and last that they heard about it. "I heard what they were promising, and I was really excited about this," said one parent. "But I haven't heard anything about how or when I'm supposed to be able to do whatever it is I'm supposed to be able to do."

Grade accuracy was another major problem that plagued students. "I was supposed to have an A+ on my report card for AP Government and instead I had a C," Senior Chandra Flack said.

"We chose EdTracker because the committee members thought it met our specifications better than all other software vendors that responded to our Request of Proposal," Ms. Mary Kay Hunt, technology director said. She also noted that it would work well with plans for the future of technology in Warren Township.

What the township wanted was a parent accessible, web-based program so all students in schools throughout the district could be linked through quick clicks on the internet. EdTracker will be able to replace both Skyward and GradeQuick at the same time.

I think that it is good for students to learn stuff like this because many students never get exposure to religion. I think that learning about different religions is fine. It's not like you have to actually believe in it.

Students in Ms. Emily Brown's Classical Literature test their acting skills in class. They were performing a modern day version of the play Lysistrata..

Senior Keagan Fife presents his Dante's Inferno project after completing the book. Family Guy was his theme in order to make it a little more interesting.

TO HEAVEN OR HELL

Bible teaches students about more than just religion

When students of Ms. Emily Brown's Classical Literature class entered the room, one thing grabbed everyone's attention. The chalkboard read "Bring Bibles Tuesday." Of course, other things were written. However, the rest of the information did not draw nearly as much attention.

When it was time to go over the day's plan, Ms. Brown informed her class they would need Bibles for the following week. The class fell silent, then into constant murmuring. Many students turned to their peers and questioned whether this was Bible study or classical literature.

"I thought it would be a good experience as long as religion was not going to be shoved down our throat, and as long as no arguments erupted within the class about whether or not God existed," junior Josh Belfus said.

The purpose of studying the Bible is not to try to evangelize or convert students into Christianity. The purpose is to show how the Hebrews lived and their beliefs. When used in class, the Bible is the same as any other textbook.

"I think learning about Christianity is beneficial whether Christian, Muslim, or atheist, you can find common ground and you can discover and discuss a decent way to live," Mr. Steve Comiskey said. "It doesn't matter if you don't believe it's the word of God, but you can learn decent morals from it. I would be fine with teaching other religions to learn about other people."

Not only did the students get to study the Bible, but hell too. Students read Dante's Inferno, an imaginative book that depicts hell through the eyes of one of its travelers. In this book, Dante describes hell having nine circles ranging from places for lustful people to places for violent people. At the end of the semester, students picked 20 fictional or dead people to send to hell.

"Getting to make our own version of hell was really cool," junior Heather Savage said. "It helped put the book into perspective."

To Heaven or Hell, who knows where one will go? The real questions may be if these things even exist. However, in Classical Lit, students got to visit both.

MATH IN THE REAL WORLD

Students relate what they learn in geometry to everyday life

> "It opens the students' eyes on how geometry is used everday, by people other than engineers or mathematicians. Ms. Janis Gaerte"

Geometry isn't just something in a textbook; its formulas and principles can be found in everyday life.

This is the concept that Ms. Janis Gaerte tries to hit home at the end of each year with a "math in the real world project" for her Geometry X class. The project is designed to have students pick a topic from "the real world" and show how it relates to geometry.

Although specific equations may not be as common, the principles can be seen in almost everything. Orthodontists use angles to straighten teeth and painting a room is easy once you have calculated the area you need to cover and how much paint to buy. Things commonly perceived as beautiful, including pictures, buildings and even people, have specific proportions that can be explained using geometry.

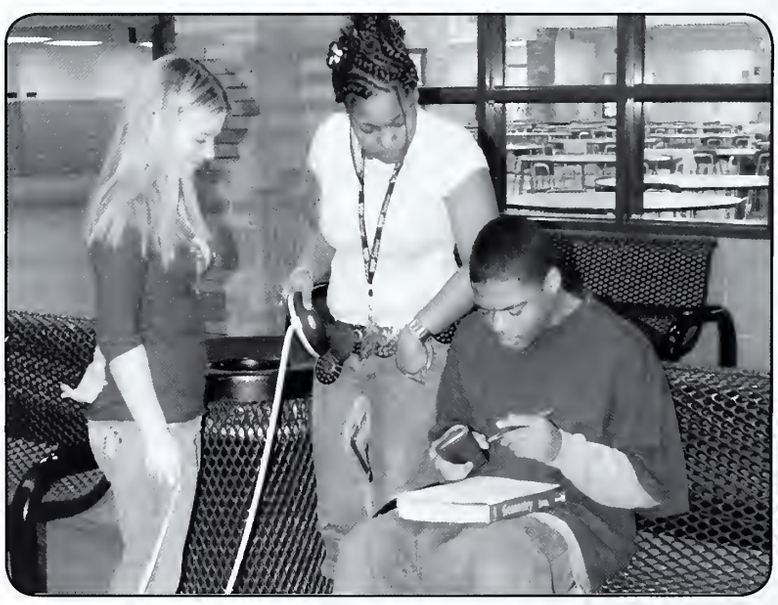
Dreaded formulas, such as the Pythagorean theorem, actually help save lives. "Firefighters use the height of a building and the truck's distance from it to determine which floors they can reach with the rescue ladder," sophomore James Hamilton said. "They also use specific hose angles and the area of their spray to help put fires out effectively." James presented his project on firemen incorporating math into their job each and everyday.

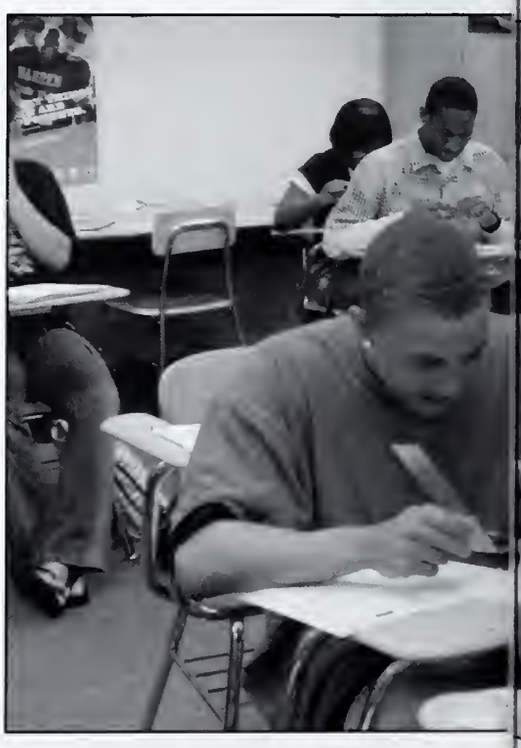
Since the institution of the assignments, there has been an unexpected variety in the topics students have selected. "The range of projects I have seen over the years is amazing," Ms. Gaerte said. "Every year someone manages to teach me something new."

"This project is my favorite part of the year because it opens the students' eyes to how geometry is used everyday, by people other than engineers or mathematicians," Ms. Gaerte said.

The students also appreciate the break it provides them. "One of the best things about it was after I presented, I didn't have to do anymore work," James said. "We didn't get any homework that week so I could just sit back and enjoy watching everyone else."

Zach Downer is measured to the inch by Jon Bryan during a geometry project held in the commons. This measurement was needed to complete the equations in the assignment.





Telia Milstead, Markisha Gains and Brenden Jones calculate measurments during a project in Mr. Meredith's Geometry Class. Students enjoy being able to participate in activites outside of the classroom.

Levi Goodman makes his mark by using a clinometer during Geometry. The tool was used to measure angles for a project in the commons. The degree's of the angles were later used to complete problems based on trigonometry.

Chasity Gardner and Leasa Clark measure their pulses after completing an obstacle course outside. This was a lab completed for Algebra/Trigonometry class lab.

Students in Ms. Jennifer Jensen's class did a project in the commons named "Bungee Barbie". They had to predict how long they should make the bungee cord without allowing the barbie to hit the ground

Students use rulers to complete their geometry problems in Mrs. Jennifer Jensen's room. Working in groups was a fun way for students to help one another and complete the problems.

Science Olympiad turns out to be one of Warren's most promising

Denise Maxwell and Sarah Stanfill dissect a squid. The squid was one of the most favorite among students due to less grotesque features.

They put the candy in dry ice at Homefest and sold us our morning doughnuts. They also went to Regionals and competed in 20 different categories including; Tower Building, Storm the Castle, Rocks and Minerals, and Physics Labs. The WCHS Science Olympiad Team emerged as a prominent part of our school this year. Although many people have not heard of them, Science Olympiad has become popular throughout the school this year.

Ms. Linda Monroe heads up the group as the coach of a 26-member team of highly educated students. Members of the Science Olympiad Team begin preparing for regional competition right after Homefest. Their preparation consisted of long hours of studying on the topic assigned to them, most of the members were in competitions that are areas of interest so the grueling hours were compelled by the love of science. The group agreed that overall, the preparation was not stressful until the week of Regionals, when Mrs. Monroe kicked it into high gear to help her team get prepared.

After Regionals, Anthony Deak said, "Personally, I felt good. All the hard work we had done was going to finally pay off."

The Science Olympiad Team placed seventh overall and placed in the four of the 20 events they competed in. Although they feel that this was an accomplishment, the whole team hopes to compete better next year.

MOLDING FUTURE LEADERS

International Relations students learn what it takes to be leaders

> "The purpose is really two fold. The first is to gain experience in diplomat and working with others. It's also just a lot of fun. Logan Ping"

At a time when our world is having so many international problems it is imperative that our future leaders learn what it takes to solve these problems and discover ways to prevent them from occurring again. Warren offers the class, International Relations, (IR), mainly to teach students how to deal with world problems and potential crisis.

This February IR student's traveled to the University of Chicago for the Model United Nations convention. This convention hosted about 300 schools from around the country and about 2300 delegates.

The real UN is an organization consisting of 191 countries. Their aim is to discuss and come up with a common agreement on international laws, securities, economic developments and social equities. The goal of the Model UN is to show high school students what it takes to achieve international peace, and in essence try to shape future leaders.

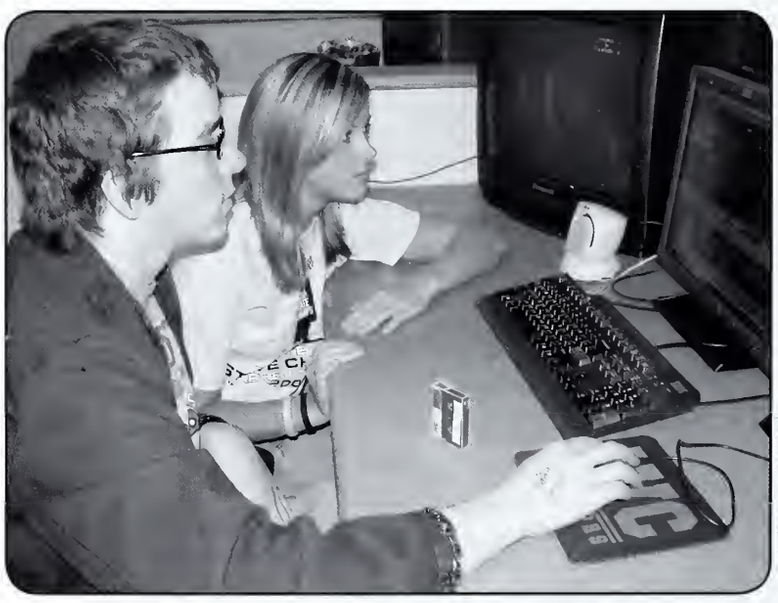
"It taught me how the United Nations worked and how representatives have to come together and focus on the best interest of the international community," junior Sarah Frische-Mouri said.

Students in IR classes, three months before the convention, were given a topic and two countries to research about. Warren students received the countries Namibia and the Republic of Korea, with sub-committees for each country.

"We had to do a lot of Internet research and bring some fact sheets with us. Once in Chicago, then it was all downhill," Senior Logan Ping said.

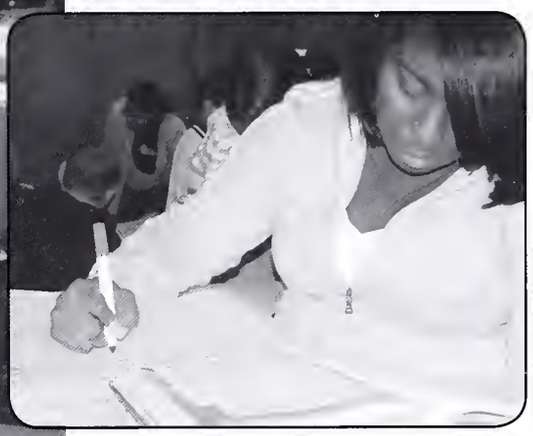
Their objective was to come up with a law or resolution that would better the country concerning topic assignments. They had four twelve-hour days to debate on why they thought their law or resolution would have a positive impact on their topic.

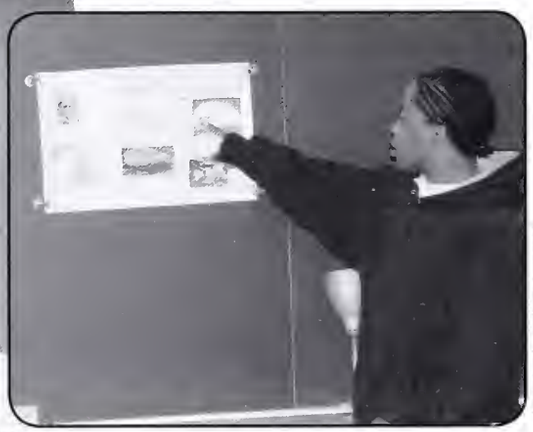
"The purpose is really two fold. The first is to gain experience in diplomacy and working with others. It's also just a lot of fun," Logan Ping said.



During their economics class, seniors Evan Strater and Liz Waggle edit their commercial they made with their group in the broadcasting studio. Students in Mr. Nelson's economics class were to get in groups and create appealing commercials to convince someone to buy their product or use their service.

During Mr. Nelson's World History class, Kadeem Goddard stamps his finger before casting his vote in the mock elections. This activity provided the students with a hands on experience of what the elections would be like.





Mr. Adam Nelson takes a different approach to teach kids how to learn the material. He divided chapters of the book up amongst groups and had them make visual diagrams.
Senior Brianna Thomas creates a diagram on one of the chapters taught during Mr. Adam Nelson's class. Making this diagram helps the class review for their test.

INFLUENCING THE YOUNG

Fourth-year World Language students help influence younger students

Senior Traci Lloyd and Junior Kylie Kent gather their belongings as they prepare to head over to Lowell Elementary. They arrive after about 15 minutes of driving and head up to Ms. Barb Henley's room. Traci says hello to the students and Kylie instructs them to take out their language folder filled with packets and information learned from the previous week.

They begin a review of all the words taught so far and instruct the students to repeat after them. Traci and Kylie answer questions and teach a few funny words that students are anxious to learn. They finish the day by singing a song in German and heading back to the high school to get ready for their next class.

Traci and Kylie are no ordinary students. They both were cadet student teachers. These were fourth year German students that helped teach German to younger students throughout the year. They traveled to Lowell Elementary one time each week to help younger students learn a little German. Traci and Kylie were just a few of the many that helped out with this program this year.

"The students were all really enthusiastic when it came to learning new words and information," said Traci.

About 15 years ago, Ms. Beth Wolff and Lowell principal Susan Howard started the world language exploratory program.

"The program helps my students to better understand the difficulty my foreign students have in understanding our English Language," said Lowell Elementary teacher Barb Henley. And for several years, Warren Central's World Language Department has given students the opportunity to help out with this program.

"What a better way to expose students than to have students in our own township teaching them," said Ms. Henley.

The class of fourth year German students traveled to Lowell this year to help influence younger students to join a World Language. Students were taught the basics of German. This usually consisted of numbers, colors and abc's. Student teachers would watch to see how well the students could pick the language up. How well they did, determined how far the cadet teachers could go into the language.

The main goal of this program was to broaden and introduce students at a younger age.

"I think foreign language is declining in schools. This program might influence the growth of it again," junior Alyssa Dewing said.

"The earlier a child gets started the easier it is to learn other languages. Lowell Elementary teacher. Sharon Spacke"

BOOTCAMP MAKES IMPACT

New program encourages participation

It's period six on a Friday. Five students toss on the required uniform preparing for boot camp rather than traditional P.E.

They finish putting on the required uniform, and head up the two flights of stairs, they start to feel butterflies knowing from past experience what is at the top. As they reach the end of the stairs, their boot camp Friday begins. Sergeant Lowery yells out "one, two, three" as the students begin with push-ups, crunches and sprints.

Sweat glistens as it rolls down their flushed faces after just completing the warm up, and students start to think about how they will start to dress and participate in gym.

"Since the boot camp program, students are taking gym a lot more seriously. It's not like in middle school when you could get away with not dressing," freshman Elizabeth Kennedy said.

Lead by Sergeant Lowery, of the U.S. Army, boot camp Friday was a program for students not dressing and participating for that week. Students would perform drills similar to that in the army for an entire class period while others in the class participated in an interactive sport such as basketball or soccer. The program established by Mr. Kevin Wright was established to pressure students to both dress and participate.

Teachers have seen a drastic change in the numbers of students participating, dressing and passing.

"The need for a more fit society has to start with the youth," Mr. William Bumphus said.

According to Ms. Luanne McCammon, more students were willing to participate to avoid boot camp and that the program was just helping to build a bigger and brighter future for students.

"It is making students more aware of fitness," she said.

"The program has made a huge impact on me," freshman David Greene said. "I did the boot camp once and haven't been back since. It is a very tiring and tough experience that I never want to experience again."

Also added into Mr. Wright's program was a rigorous weekly schedule. Aimed to improve students' strength, flexibility and cardiovascular areas by following a complex schedule each week. On Mondays, students participated in "General Fitness," an area where students received a mini-lecture and did basic calisthenics. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, students completed a "Basic Training Day" focusing on flexibility, strength training, plyometrics, cardiovascular and swimming.

Wednesdays were considered a "Lifetime Sports Day." Students participated in sports such as basketball, soccer and volleyball. The main change in physical education this year, "High Five Friday" was for students to either participate in an interactive activity or boot camp depending on which was earned.

"This program is designed well due to the fact that all areas of fitness are being met. Compared to last year, this program is so much better," sophomore Blake Koss said.

Students participating in boot camp were also not in the running to receive "Student of the Week," a new program established to reward worthy students for their good work.

"The program is great and is really helping get rid of sedentary lifestyles," freshman Jomar Lang said.

A HELPING HAND

Students use their art skills to raise money for Katrina victims

The students walk into Ceramics class, immediately go get their not too wet, not too dry clay, sit down at their wheel, and start to push the wheel with their feet to get it going. As they slap the clay onto the metal plate, they begin forming the clay with their hands. Tall and skinny, short and fat, different sizes, it does not matter, all that really does matter, is that these students are doing something that will count far more than just a grade.

The bowls they make are auctioned off at a benefit dinner. The starting bid is $5. In the past years, all the money collected was given to the Mosel Sanders Club, but due to the devastating hurricanes that hit Louisiana on August 29, 2005, all the money that was raised went to the victims of hurricane Katrina. When making the bowls students keep it in their mind that the bowls that they are making would benefit many lives of people they do not even know.

Many students felt a sense of accomplishment knowing that they were touching lives of people thousands of miles away.

"To know that I am helping out children who really need it, that is really something that can make my day," junior Sophia Saleh said.

"It is a worth while program," Mr. Craddock, the teacher of one of the ceramic classes said. "When is comes to giving money many teenagers want to help but do not know where to go or what really to do. Having students make these bowls gives them an opportunity to truly help out those in need."

Senior Nathanael Miles uses the ceramic wheel to add the finishing touches on his pot. These projects were sold to raise money to help hurricane Katrina victims.

Carolyn Tuttle heads out to stretch with 12 other girls as she prepares to tumble at Gymnastics Unlimited. She begins by jumping into her right and left leg splits and holding it for a 10 second count. She repeats the count with the 12 other gymnasts as they begin to count.

After reaching one, they fall to the ground and begin to rock and roll. They finish their stretches and head off to uneven bars where the girls work on their pullovers and casts. After completing the bar stations, the class heads off to the spring floor for the last 25 minutes.

The floor is what Carolyn likes the best, where she can perfect her handstands and bridges.

"I like doing forward rolls the best," said Carolyn Tuttle. After perfecting her stations and breaking a sweat, she heads off with the 12 other girls to receive a stamp or sticker for their hard work.

Carolyn works hard to improve her gymnastics ability. She practices each week for one hour and does the same stations as the other gymnasts in her class do.

"I love having fun at gymnastics," said Carolyn Tuttle "We get to jump into [foam] blocks."

Carolyn is no ordinary gymnast though. Carolyn is one of the severe special needs students who attends Warren Central. This is just one of the activities that Carolyn participates in outside of school.

Warren Central High School helps educate severally disabled students. These students range between the ages of 18 to 21 and have moderate to severe disabilities. Not only do these students help make a huge difference inside of Warren they also make a huge difference outside of it as well.

Students perform various activities such as cooking, cleaning and working at various locations to help attain the abilities to perform skills similar to those in the real world. Some examples of what students do during school are washing tables after lunch, delivering the Indianapolis Star to classrooms and cooking a food item each day.

These skills helped teach the proper use of many household items such as the oven or washing machine. These skills also gave them a better sense of what having a job is like.

The job skills taught throughout their high school career are put to use after they graduate. Wal-mart and Uncle Bills are some examples of where special need students work at after graduation.

These are places they have worked or helped at during their high school years, usually the locations of Community Based Involvement trips each week.

Students also participate in activities such as Best Buddies, Serendipity and Special Olympics. These clubs and after school activities are used to boost their social skills and ability to interact with people.

Many Warren students like to help out with these clubs and organizations after school each day.

"The Best Buddies program is a way of building a relationship with someone special; a way of making more and more friends throughout the school," junior Sara Smith said.

THE AWARD WINNING WARREN OWL

more than just your average newspaper

After wringing her fingers tirelessly, senior Becky Klimaszewski from the Warren "Owl" stood up and screamed with excitement after "Warren Central, from Indianapolis, Indiana!" was called. The "Owl" was a Pacemaker Award Winner.

The National Scholastic Press Association's Pacemaker is one of the top national awards that a student-run publication can receive, and is by most student journalists considered the Pulitzer Prize of student journalism. The "Owl" has received a Pacemaker two years in a row, and this year's Pacemaker was only one of three major awards that the "Owl" earned.

For the first time in the publication's history, the "Owl" won not only the Pacemaker, but the second top national award, the Gold Crown from the Columbia Scholastic Press Association in New York and the top Indiana award, the Hoosier Star from the Indiana High School Press Association, beating out other tough competitors like North Central, Carmel and Lawrence Central. The staff had never won all three awards in one year.

The "Owl" newspaper was nationally renowned as one of the top publications in the entire country. The staff always hoped to be so successful, but an entire year of struggle and hard work paid off.

Newspaper has after-school production three days a month. Major editors like Becky and Features Editor Alise Cool spend upwards of five hours a day compiling information, then working on pages, pictures, stories and spreads.

The paper was judged on stories that were chosen, how well they were written, design and overall editorial leadership, all of which the staff worked together to achieve in every issue.

"I couldn't be prouder," Becky said of her staff and their work ethic. "We spend countless hours each day, each week and each month trying to put out a paper that the students of Warren will want to read and will find fun and informative."

STARTING OUT EARLY

Students take classes to prepare for health occupations

> "It made me realize this is what I want to do after high school."
> Erin Cole

Everyday the senior students of the health and careers class started their day promptly at 7:30 a.m.; nametag, watch, and a pen were required. The students would then pass out breakfast trays, and begin morning care.

Every year internships are offered through the health and career classes in the Walker Career Center. The internships are offered to seniors who took health and careers as a junior and who display an interest in the field of medicine.

Students who took the health and career class start their internships right before Christmas break at Brookview Health Center. They were required to work at Brookview Health Center for six weeks before they were aloud to go to other hospitals and health centers. Some of the other places the students interned at were Community East Hospital, and the Early Childhood Center.

Some of the tasks that the students did while at the different hospitals and health centers were bathing, assisting with the feeding and dressing, checking vital signs, and observations of the skin. When the students finish their internships they receive a Certified Nursing Assistant License and can get a job right out of high school. For those students who continue to work at a hospital or health center for more than two years, a scholarship that pays for college. Many great opportunities are offered through just this class.

"I have learned to put others before myself and to better understand what the patient and their family are going through," senior Erin Cole said.

"This experience taught me a lot. I really enjoyed the experience. It made me realize this is what I want to do after high school. It was a step toward my future," senior Ashley Moore said.

In a lot of cases students do not get the chance to experience their field of work until college or much after that. These seniors get the chance to experience the day-to-day life of nurses, and get a real close-up experience.

"This experience taught me the real life of going into this career. You see a lot of things that you only see on television," senior Jasmine Coleman said.

Amy Keesling works on the teeth of a dummy during class. These were used to further and practice skills taught throughout the year.

BUILDING A FUTURE

Students build houses and careers

At the corner of Heather Circle near Warren Place on the eastside of campus the workers have put finishing touches on a one story, all-brick house, built by the building trades classes over the past two years. This year among the many boys, a girl came out for the class, junior Emily Bare.

"This is just what I like to do, it interests me," said Emily Bare on why she chose to take the class. Like many other workers, Emily plans on a career involving construction after she graduates.

The building trades class offers students time to work in construction later on in their lives the ability to get hands on experience during high school. They learn how to do every aspect of building a house from the framing, to the insulation, to the electricity, to the plumbing, to laying the brick.

"This class offers me a real feeling of what it is like to build a house and obstacles you have to go through just to get the house done. I plan on having my own construction business when I get older and want to build a house for myself," junior Nathan Walker said when asked why he took interest in the building trades class.

Every four years the building trades class finishes the house they have been working on. Before they put it up for sale, they must go through all the inspections to make sure that the house they had been putting so much time and effort into meets all codes and standards for the people who want buy the house. Actually the students' houses are often times better constructed than custom homes because of the constant supervision and checks by the teachers and professionals who help out. In the spring of 2006 the building trades class finally got to put the house up for sale.

So what is next, did they just have the rest of the year off? The answer is no they all start laying the foundation for the next house they will be working on in the fall of the next school year. The building trades class is a continuous process of building a house all year round. Rain, sleet or snow, the students of building trades were outside building houses and careers.

organization members volunteer their time to help community

Teenagers have often been portrayed as selfish and uncaring. Some students took it upon themselves to change this stereotype.

There were many organizations that got involved with helping the community from donating time and money, to helping fellow students, and volunteering for many local events.

Two of the biggest organizations at Warren Central, Student Council and National Honor Society, were a big part of that this year.

Robert Stroude, a senior in National Honor Society and Student Council, said, "I enjoy working with the two biggest clubs at Warren. It allows me to meet new people and help out Warren district."

Student Council, which had the most members of any other organizations, got involved with various activities throughout the year. Members donated toys to Prevail, a battered women's shelter, and worked at the Special Olympics bowling tournament. Other activities that have become tradition for Warren Central's Student Council are the canned food drive and the township's annual Children's Christmas party. For the annual canned food drive, the school collected 30,627 cans to provide the less fortunate families of the township with a Thanksgiving dinner.

For the Children's Christmas party, many other organizations and classes from around the school got involved; over 100 children were sponsored by Warren Central's students and teachers.
Ashley Seehase, a senior in Student Council, said, "The Children's Christmas party gave kids the chance to get gifts because many of the parents were unable to afford any presents."

Members from National Honor Society also helped out in the community. Every Saturday, members went to Old Bethel's Food Pantry and help pass out food to families who could not afford much. Members also had the chance to go during the week to stock the shelves at the food pantry.

"For NHS, I worked at the Grassy Creek fall festival. My job was to load hay into the wagons for the little kids. It was cool to see how much fun the little kids were having," said Robert.

Both Student Council and National Honor Society members volunteered their time throughout the year to make a difference in their community. Students did not get anything in return, but the satisifaction of knowing that they made an impact on someone was reward enough.

DURING THE CHRISTMAS party, senior Justine Miller helps an elementary student unwrap one of her presents bought by Ms. Garete's class. WE'VE GOT SPIRIT

New club is started to get more attention to school events

After interviewing all potential members for Sunshine Committee, Ms. Amy Moeller and Ms. Beth Wolff couldn't decide between two groups whom to put in charge.

After debating the topic, they came up with the idea to create a new committee called the Spirit Committee.

"It wasn't suppose to start, but so many people wanted to join the Sunshine Committee that they started the Spirit Committee," Senior Bethany Ballard said, one of the members in charge of Spirit Committee.

Any Student Council member was allowed to join, but had to attend meetings each month and events throughout the year. After members attended at least five events, they were given a free spirit committee shirt. Meetings were held in the morning before school in the west cafeteria.

The Spirit Committee's main goal was to get more of the student body out to school events. They also gave out candy to student council members for their birthdays. They also passed out popsicles to all Student Council members at an April meeting.

One of the incentives Spirit Committee offered anyone who wore a Spirit Committee shirt to a basketball game was given free popcorn. Students could buy a shirt in the bookstore. The shirts said "We've got spirit, yes we do, we've got spirit how 'bout you?" on the back. Members had yellow shirts, while others who bought their shirts had black ones.

"The kids really enjoyed the activities that were held; everyone got involved," senior Courtney Roberts said, who is the Student Council president.

There were about 30-40 students who came out to each event because of the Spirit Committee's incentives.

They helped sponsor the raffle for the spirit couch during Winterfest week.

During football season, which is always the most spirited season for students, Spirit Committee placed styrofoam cups accross the fence for senior night.

They also gave away tickets to a game for someone who came closest to guessing the number of candies in a jar.

They also sponsored tailgating parties before some of the football games, which happend to be their biggest turnout.

Because this was the first year for Spirit Committee, there are still a lot of details to work out, but overall, it was a huge success with the students.

"We plan on improving the committee to make it better for next year," Courtney said.

STUDENT COUNCIL OFFICERS grab members' attention by leading a spirit chant called Baby Shark at a March meeting. Members also said the pledge, heard a leadership message, and went over point opportunities before splitiing up into groups each meeting.

New NHS members get inducted during the annual induction ceremony by NHS officers. To be a member, students must have worked hard in class, have had a G.P.A. of 9.0 and were willing to help out in the community.

PLAYING AROUND

New activities are started for members to meet and have more fun

"I know that National Honor Society is not regarded as a fan club, but I'm hoping that we can make it that and not just that academic club I'm in so I can put it on my college application," junior Anthony Deak said.

This year, National Honor Society sponsored outings to Waterman's Pumpkin Patch in October and ice-skating at Ellenberger Park in February.

These events did not count towards any service points required for members; instead, they focused on the social aspects of being in a club.

"With such a large group of members in NHS, it is hard for everyone to get to know each other. So, it was with this non-point related event that we hoped everyone could get together and get to know each other a bit better," Anthony said.

This was the motivation behind creating events that NHS members could attend without having to fill out paperwork at the end of the night.

Between numerous other activities, homework, sports and commitments, that members are involved with, not very many were able to attend, but a better turn out may come from activities more students are comfortable with, or have a warmer climate than an ice rink in February.

"With all the time required for Key club, French club, Math club and Science Olympiad, it's pretty hard to be involved," junior Armando Arreola said.

Although they were not highly attended, it did not take away from the experience. The students had fun meeting other members during the events.

"It didn't bother me that not many people came. We all still had fun and got to know the people who did come even better," junior Kyle Burdick said.

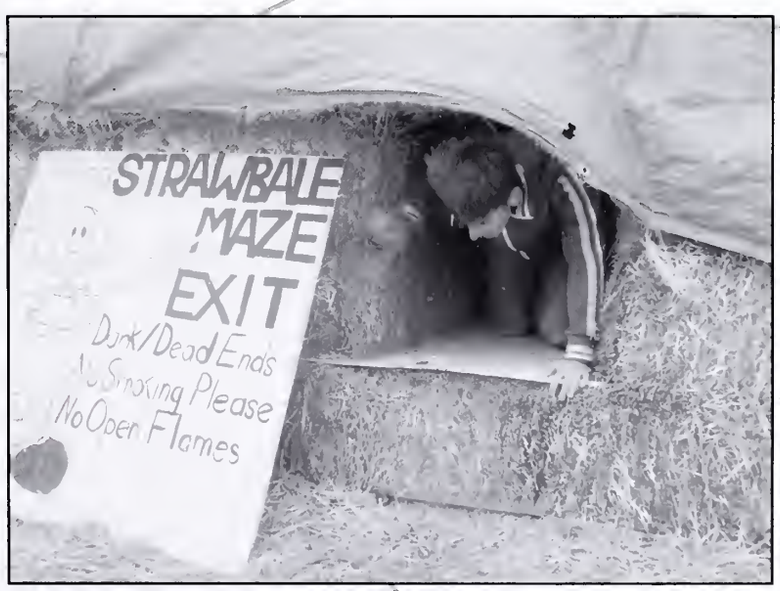
There was no shortage of activity either. Members raced and twirled around the ice rink, but most of all, they fell.

Armando remembers his, and others, frequent acquaintances with the ice.

"I remember Cornelius (Audu) falling over and over again, but in the end he was skating like a pro," said Armando.

While it is still undecided whether these events will continue, many members think this is a step in the right direction. This was a small step that NHS had taken to make the club more enjoyable for the members.

"It shows they are making an effort to improve some of the weak points, which will make an already great club even better in the future," Kyle said.



JUNIOR ANTHONY DEAK goes through a maze at Watermen's Pumpkin Patch. Those who attended picked pumpkins, went through the maze and rode a ferris wheel.

MAKING AN IMPRESSION

Reader's Theatre students influence elementary students to join the program

Every year, the Reader's Theatre program delivers a holiday performance to over a dozen elementary schools in Warren Township. If you think that Reader's Theatre is just about reading, think again.

The gymnasiums all over Warren Township explode with sound and action wherever this group performs. Vocal synchronization and projection, line memorization and even jumping jacks are just a few things required in this performance.

While entertainment and performance are the main objectives, there is usually a much more meaningful result of these shows. The Reader's Theatre students inspire the younger children to join when they reach high school.

Ms. Judy Taylor, a fifth grade teacher at Sunny Heights Elementary, noticed the effect the show has on her students.

"The kids are so impressed with the show that they want to be in Reader's Theatre."

Dylan Leonard, sophomore and member of Reader's Theatre, was no exception when he first saw the shows.

"It was always a lot of fun. I wanted to be in Reader's Theatre and now here I am."

While inspiring students to become involved in an activity when they reach high school, Reader's Theatre sets a good example by teaching morals in their stories. Lessons learned were forgiveness and the importance of moderation.

Even the members, like Ashley Hill, learn new lessons every day from being a part of Reader's Theatre.

"Reader's Theatre has shown me that everyone is equal. It taught me that nobody is better than anyone else."

While Reader's Theatre may make an impact on elementary students, it has also made an impact on Ms. Susan Bravard, who has enjoyed her final year before retirement.

"No matter what I have been teaching; Speech, English, Drama or Reader's Theatre, my goal in my teaching has always been to teach life lessons as well as the subject matter. I think there is no greater gift that you can give a student than a higher sense of self-esteem; that will impact a child for a lifetime."

Junior, Kyle Nelson said, "This class is not just about teaching you how to act and the confidence you need, but Ms. Bravard teaches you everything in life. That has just changed my life." Ms. Bravard has definitely touched the lives of her students.

BEFORE THE CHRISTMAS show, Ms. Bravard greets the crowd. She wrote or co-wrote all of the Christmas plays that Reader's Theatre students have performed.

SPEAK FOR YOUR LIFE

Warren Central hosts and wins speech state finals for the first time

With sweaty palms, weak knees, and throbbing hearts, the speech team sat anxiously awaiting, in the east cafeteria as the announcer called off the second place team. He announced Chesterson as the second place winner, and that was the moment it hit the Warren speech team, they won first place in state for the first time.

"This was like a dream come true," head coach Scott Black said.

The speech team had taken first in all but one competition this season when they were short in competitors because of the scheduling conflict with show choir, but they did not let their success go to their heads.

"Each member is required to stay after school for 30 minutes a week with either a coach or captain. This year we had two retreats (one before sectionals and one before state). They were simple days set aside to practice speech pieces and build team morality and unity," senior Jimmy Worrell said.

Jimmy was one of three captains, along with seniors Keagan Fife and Annie Thompson, who each gave the team words of motivation before the state meet started along with warm-up exercises.

The team also took advantage of peer coaching and the video technology to receive more feedback on how to improve their performance for state.

All of their practice and hard work paid off after climbing one spot at state each year since 2002 when they placed fifth.

"Some people don't realize how big this is. Indiana is among the most competitive states in the country in the area of speech," Coach Black said.

Even though the team was consistently good, junior Becca Euliss was the only individual to place first at state with her humorous piece.

"When I realized I won, I got so excited that I cried. Part of me thought they made a mistake because it all seemed so surreal," Becca said.

With many other individuals and duos placing in top positions at state, the team earned enough points to not only come in first in their division, but first over all.

"When we claimed the state championship, I felt a complete sense of victory and completeness. Knowing how hard we had worked all year and the dedication given by everyone, getting lower than first just wouldn't be fair," said Jimmy.

SECRET OF THE SIRENS

Winterguard brings home state for the third year in a row

Many people were left wondering what exactly the winterguard show was about. The show was based on a poem written by Margaret Atwood titled "Siren Song." The poem explains the entire show.

Sirens are birdlike women that look picturesque and mythical. The winterguard's uniforms portrayed this with a green animal-like material on a black corset that each girl wore.

At the beginning of the poem the sirens are seductively pulling the sailors into their reach.

"This is my favorite part because I can smile and just be myself," said Emily Bays, junior.

The poem states that the song forces men to leap overboard in squadrons even though they see beached skulls. The winterguard didn't go as far as putting skulls on the floor but they definitely lured the sailors in.

During the sound track of the show a few phrases were repeated over and over again. The phrases included: "Can I tell you the secret?" and "Come closer."

The beginning of the show had beautiful music with smiling girls to emphasize the seductive part of the show. From about the middle to the end of the show, the music was very loud and somewhat terrifying. Many girls had to learn to be "mean" in order to perform this part of the show.

One section of the show sounded like the chants of many men. This was because when the sailors took their boats through the area where the sirens were, the sailors chanted to drown out the sirens beautiful song. If the sailors heard the beautiful song of the sirens the sailors would go directly to them and die.

In the poem, if the sirens did not kill the sailors they themselves would have died. The show ended with the girls running and crawling to the front of the floor and pulling the sailors and the judges in. The show was very dark and mysterious.

The winterguard had a very successful season. They received many first place trophies throughout the entire season.

The winterguard also took home state again for the third year in a row. This alone was a very big accomplishment for all the time and effort that the girls had put into their show.

The winterguard also went to Dayton over Spring Break for National Competition. At Nationals, the guards involved must perform at a prelims and semi-finals before they have the opportunity to perform at finals. They placed eleventh overall.

THE WINTERGUARD ENDS their show at the front of the tarp "pulling the judges in." In order to perform this show the girls had to learn a lot about Sirens and how they attacked sailors, this was a big part of the season.

CATCHING HER TOSS with a look of scorn on her face, Jesseca Phillipson understands the importance of catching with great strength. Having a show that needed some acting was a lot of fun for most of the girls but also a lot of hard work.

COMPETING AT STATE, Nicole De La Fuente to performs while also doing her drill and flag work. Performing has a great impact on the score given by the judges.

KELLY HARRISON PLAYS the bassoon, which is a very hard instrument to master, at the Indiana Music Educator's Conference. Kelly was one of four students to play in the side by side ISO concert held in March.

DURING THE MARCHING band season, Laura Nash and Chandra Flack play their duet in the Baroque Samba. The band began practicing in July to prepare for the competitive season that ended in October.

A PASSION FOR MUSIC

Being only band to perform at IMEA is honor for director and students

Many people consider Friday the 13th to be ill fated or ominous, but this was not the case for the Honors Band, who performed at the Indiana Music Educators Convention (IMEA). The event was held in the convention center and happened to fall on February the 13th, which ended up being quite a lucky day for the Honors Band.

The convention is for any music director within the state and is a great honor to be the only band to perform there. The band toiled for many hours inside and out of the classroom preparing for the performance.

"Practice did take a lot of time, especially in December, and the week before the conference," French horn player, freshmen Abby Springer said. "I had to plan my schedule around practices, but it is something I really like so it didn't bother me."

All of the rehearsals and the performance itself helped the new members, especially freshmen, become more adjusted to the class.

"At first, it was hard to keep up; I wasn't used to the music or the pace," Abby said. Through the help of other students, she became more at ease. "Everyone was really nice and willing to help. It got more comfortable as I went along."

The program they presented, entitled "Whimsical Winds," included seven pieces and displayed Band Director John Hilmer's desire to move away from dark, dramatic pieces.

"At this year's IMEA Convention, I realized I had to dispel the 'dark' aura of past selections," Mr. Hilmer said. The pieces chosen were lighter, spirited ones that could be enjoyed by all ages.

"Who can resist even a repressed grin when the Liberty Bell March from the old Monty Python series begins to play? Who will not smile as they conjure up an image of the antics of clowns?" Mr. Hilmer asked.

Mr. Hilmer noted that the contest pushed the group to improve earlier and higher. Many excelled individually, such as senior Kelly Harrison who played the bassoon solo in Hungarian Fantasy. Many other guest soloists and conductors added to the rich composition of the Honors Band, including a solo by Choir Director Todd Hawks, playing by Assistant Band Director Ed Meckes, and conducting by Mr. David Brooks.

The amount of hard work and passion the Honors Band put into their performance was reflected in the audience's standing ovation.

The winter percussion winning state was also a great accomplishment for the band department.

ERIKA BILYEU PLAYS Hocus Pocus at the Jazz Band's Winter Concert. Many music students looked forward to Jazz Band because they played more challenging songs.

PLAYING EACH NOTE with articulate detail, Dan Matthews, William Prim, Nick Carter and Ashley Martin are sure to keep their feet in time with the music. Most people who are not in marching band do not understand the concept of keeping their feet in time with music, but at band practice this has been drilled into everyone's head.

Ever versatile, Brittany May switched from her usual instrument, the violin, to playing the cello this year. The Symphonic Orchestra played pieces of considerable difficulty such as "The Gavotte" this year.

Hard work does pay off. Playing her violin during this year's Christmas concert, Erin Meid enjoys her hard-earned position as Concert Mistress. Erin has played the violin for 12 years.

BEYOND THE CLASS

Orchestra goes to extreme challenges to achieve perfection in their performance

While some students may get completely exhausted doing their couple of hours worth of homework, orchestra students often feel twice the strain.

Being a member of the symphonic orchestra with Mr. Gradon Emmert as the instructor, for some, means practicing seven to eight hours a week.

That is, on top of attending classes for seven additional hours and in some cases, being involved in other organizations. Just ask senior Maggie Branham, violinist and varsity cheerleader, or another orchestra member, senior Lewis Gill who also works at least 20 hours a week at his part-time job.

So is all the practice really necessary? "I think so! With all the practice, it betters the performance," senior Erin Meid said.

Erin has pushed herself in many ways including practicing two and a half hours at home and the length of a class period five days a week. She believes that practice makes perfect. Others seem to agree.

"This amount of practice is definitely needed," junior Sachet Watson said.

The practice doesn't seem too extreme to the orchestra. It is never a burden for them because they are used to large amounts of practice. Mr. Emmert is aware of the challenges he presents to the students.

"The level of literature that the students play is what the professionals in symphonies are playing. There has to be loyalty and dedication. Attitude is everything. When a challenge arises, you have to overcome it."

Yet he knows that the orchestra is more than capable of not only overcoming, but mastering this challenge.

Practices and performances prepare and expose the students to large audiences and playing under pressure.

As a payoff for all their hard work, orchestra students can see an improvement in their performance between practices and the actual shows.

So, in spite of the extreme work load and dedication that are necessary components of orchestra. The members definitely agree that it's all worth it in the end just to see another tiny step toward perfection in their performance.

When asked what his favorite thing about Warren Central is, Mr. Emmert replied, "I just really appreciate being treated like a professional. I'm going to be here a long time."

DURING THIS YEAR'S Christmas concert, Brian Barger, Nathan Greiner and Brittany May perform "O Holy Night." Other holiday favorites performed included "It's The Most Wonderful Time of The Year" and "Have Yourself a Merry Little Christmas."

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performs such pieces as Beethoven's "Symphony Number Seven" and Mozart's "Bassoon Concerto" during Warren World of Music. This event took place in February at the Performing Arts Center for fifth to eighth grade students.

NEVER SHORT ON drama, Connection sings "We Dance" during the Fall Choral Concert in the PAC. At the state meet, Connection placed fourth in the all day event.

PUTTING SOME ATTITUDE into Warren World of Music, Lamont Hudson, Brandon Arnold, and Brian Oakley sing "Black or White." The elementary and middle schools came during the day to see the perfromance.

GETTING THERE

Connection places fourth in State competition at Ball State

"Honestly no, not in the slightest. It was surprising."

Senior and president of The Connection Show Choir, Whitney Dennis, was just stating the facts when asked if she had expected Connection Choir to make it to the State Competition, let alone place fourth.

Nobody expected it. Yet the reasons why have nothing to do with lack of support and school spirit, but the realization of what a huge accomplishment even getting there is.

Never in school history has the choir made it to the Indiana State Competition. So what made this year so exceptional?

"Last year was Mr. Hawks' first year with us so that took some adjusting on both parts. This year, we have most of the same people from last year, and we just got stronger and grew from there," said senior Elizabeth Eckle.

Junior Jessica Murphy knows the importance of unity within the choir.

"We are like family," Jessica said.

Included, if not the center, in that family is choir director Mr. Todd Hawks.

"He's a great guy, a great teacher, as well as a friend," said Whitney.

This year, the Connection Choir fought to improve as a family. "It's a team effort, we all encourage each other," Elizabeth said.

In the end, Connection became champions as a family when they progressed to the State Competition Finals.

"That alone was enough. It was a mess! When they called our name as finalists we all just looked around at each other and cried in amazement," Jessica said. "I think we really deserve it because we didn't expect to win or even place and the other choirs are used to it. We have such a huge appreciation for the little things because we're used to being the underdog. It was the best thing I've experienced in my entire life."

While Jessica looked forward to another successful season, others took great satisfaction in ending their final year strong.

"It's bittersweet yet fulfilling to know the hardwork has paid off and especially for seniors to see how Connection has improved," said Whitney.

A humble group like Connection Choir needs no state trophy. They knew that just getting there by working together is a victory in itself.

AS A DUET, Danetria Davie and Victoria Duerson sing "Once Upon a Time" while the other girls in the choir changed clothes. The girls performed this duet at the Ben Davis "Giant Spectacular."

STEALING THE SPOTLIGHT, Anna-Marie Hosel sings her solo in "All I Want For Christmas is You." The Christmas show, which has held in the PAC, consisted of all of the choirs singing their favorite Christmas songs.

After a six year tenure as head coach, three consecutive state championships, and a decline to coach at a top football program in Georgia, Head Football Coach Kevin Wright decided to leave Warren Central.

"Mrs. Wright and Coach Wright have really made a most powerful difference on this town of ours," Mr. Burchet said. "Multiple scholarships have been awarded to our student athletes. With their work, there's been doors opened that would have otherwise not been opened. Not just because of athletic ability, but because of their intrest in academics."

The players, other coaches and Warren's general student population were not informed before hand and Coach Wright's surprising announcement was made to everyone at the same time.

Junior linebacker Rodney Morton said, "At first I felt betryaed because I thought he was committed to me, but then I thought about it and he has to do what is best for him and his family."

The winning tradition of Warrior football is still being taken care of, assisstant coach and defensive coordinator Steve Tutsie will assume duties as head coach.

"Obviously we're a top 25 program in the nation," Mr. Burchett said. "I have the utmost confidence that Coach Tutsie will continue that excellence."

"The Wrights have also shown through their leadership that Warren Central can do it. Warren Central can achieve in a number of areas. They've had excellent expectations of us, in terms of not only what we're capable of athletically, but academically," said Mr.Burchett

Storied rival fuels team in 6th consecutive victory over Ben Davis

AND ANOTHER ONE

"Coach Wright and I have a solid relationship because he lets me make the big plays I know how to make."
Dexter Taylor, 12

DEXTER TAYLOR
IMPACT: Quarterback and Mr. Football winner

Ben Davis has always been my favorite game of the season for many reasons. One they are our biggest rival. Two, I always know our games against them will be hype. The third reason is because it's at the beginning of the season and it foreshadows how good the team will play the rest of the season.

I especially love playing on their field because I get that dominating feeling knowing that the team can win on their turf. Before the game, my adrenalin was rushing. Before games I don't do much to get myself hyped. My mentality is already focused, but I do like to listen to music to mellow my mind and relax any tense nerves.

Coach Wright always tells us to go out and have fun and having fun is what the game is all about. Although he expects us to keep our heads in the game and play at a level that we are capable of playing.

My relationship with Coach Wright is special and over the years it has grown. Coach Wright and I have a solid relationship because he lets me make the big plays I know how to make. He allows me to step up and be the leader on the field, no questions asked.

This game against Ben Davis this year was particularly important, because it was my senior year. The game draws a lot of press and attention to myself, the team, coaches and other players, so I had to make sure I made a big impact.

I think I did just that, made an impact. My goal is not to be selfish, but in a quarterback position, I do what I think is best for the team. I scored the first touchdown of the game and from then on I knew that we were going to show them what we were made of.

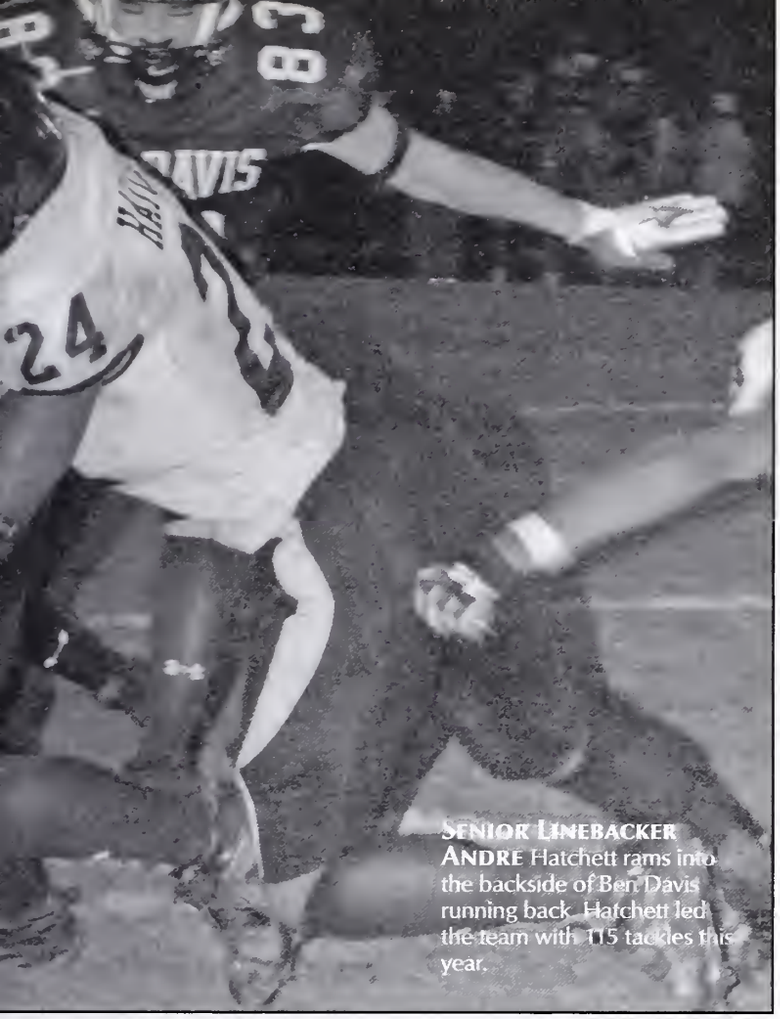
The whole first half we were dominant, and the score was 21-13 at halftime. At the half, we felt like finishing them off so that we could walk away feeling good.

When we came out third quarter, our defense held up tightly. We left them scoreless for the rest of the game. That allowed our offense to relax and continue dominating.

I think that game was one of the hardest games I played this season, just because mentally they tried to get into my mind and it was brutal.

I thought that I would be really excited after the game, especially with the media, but I wasn't. I was simply satisfied with the fact that we did what we set out to do.

From what I could tell, the team was satisfied with the way we played and I think Warren Central games against Ben Davis game will always be a game that people will anticipate and a game that the players will always play hard to win.



Senior Linebacker Andre Hatchett rams into the backside of Ben Davis running back. Hatchett led the team with 115 tackles this year.

Team rebuilds to avenge regular season loss to MIC rival Lawrence North

SWEET TASTE OF REVENGE

It was really hard to beat us when the whole team was playing at its best.

Darren Evans, 11

DARREN EVANS
IMPACT: Running back and a leading rusher

My motivation for the whole season was my grandfather after he died. He always called and he kept all of my statistics even though he lived in Mississippi. He was my biggest supporter.

I missed the regular season game against Lawrence North due to his death. What made that weekend even worse was when I found out we lost and I even received phone calls from Lawrence North players saying they were going to beat us again in the state tournament. The phone calls alone were enough motivation for me.

By the time the third-round Sectional game arrived, the rivalry between us had grown because they challenged us a little in the pre-season scrimmage and again during the regular season.

Many people said me being gone was a key factor in our loss the first time, but I thought that the team just did not show up. We knew we couldn't let them get the best of us when it really counted.

Before every game, we prayed as a team but I always prayed by myself. It helped me focus on what I wanted to do during that game. Then, whatever I said I was going to do, I would go out and do it.

In the first quarter, we scored first and we scored quickly. Our defense stepped up that game too, allowing only one touchdown. Then that allowed the offense to take over rest of the way.

I always thought we would win, but based on the first game and the pre-season challenge, I thought Lawrence North would have put up a better fight.

During halftime, Coach Wright just told us to make sure that we stayed focused and not to lose sight of the ultimate goal, which was going to state.

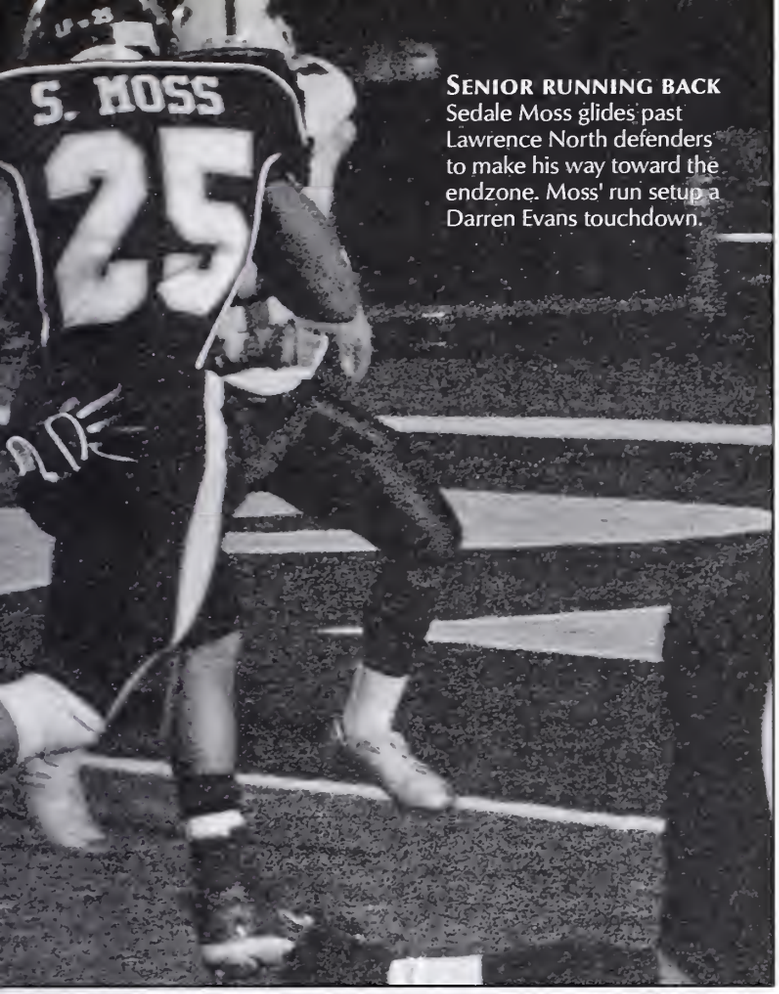
By the second half, I was certain that we were going to win the game. The intensity never left us. Even in the locker room our emotions were still raging from the previous defeat.

Everyone had something to play for that night. I was playing for my grandfather and my teammates who missed me. Some of the seniors were playing just for the simple fact that it was their last year and that game could have been their last.

It was really hard to beat us when the whole team was playing at its best and that night was one of our best performances during the season.

After the game, I really did not have any animosity toward the Lawrence North players anymore despite the phone calls I received. It wasn't just because we won, it was because it didn't matter anymore. I think the players respected us a little more afterward. The first time game they didn't.

It felt good to come back and win. It was sort of like we got the last laugh.



Senior running back Sedale Moss glides past Lawrence North defenders to make his way toward the endzone. Moss' run setup a Darren Evans touchdown.

Teammates huddle up and celebrate their victory over local rival Lawrence North. The win brought the team its fifth consecutive Sectional title under Coach Kevin Wright.

Team's hard work brings state trophy back to Warren again

3-PEAT STATE CHAMPS

"I like to chill, joke around and relax so my nerves will be calm before I play.
- Jerimy Finch, 11"

JERIMY FINCH
IMPACT: Two year varsity defensive standout

The most important part of the state game had to be dedicating the game to junior middle linebacker Andre Nicholson (#3). He was such an essential part of the team the whole season. When we found out he couldn't play, we felt like we owed it to him.

The days leading up to the state game were also important to me because we got to spend so much time together as a team. Thursday, we had a regular practice and film. Friday, we went bowling and saw a movie. We even went to the dome to see Coach Wright's dad's team play in their state championship game.

On gameday, we practiced and did run-throughs at the dome and watched some of the other teams play.

State championship games are always special because you know your team made it and you had a vital part in the season.

Coach Wright doesn't really have to say much because we had leaders on the team that already knew what to do. This was my third state championship game, so I knew what I had to do. Even though the feeling was familiar, nothing erases that nervous feeling I get before the game.

Before the game, or any game, I never like to get really hype. I like to chill, joke around and relax so my nerves will be calm before I play. The mood in the locker room was kind of tense, but we had been there before, so everyone was anxious to win another state championship. That's what we had worked toward all season.

We hadn't heard much about Hamilton Southeastern's statistics or rankings during the season, but we weren't going to think any less of them as a team. Either way, we were going to play our hardest, no matter how good or bad they were.

The first half, the game began to feel just like any other game. We got into our rhythm and found the endzone comfortably. During halftime, I was slightly injured. I got cramps, so my legs tightened up. My injury wasn't a hindrance, though. I went on to return one interception for 40 yards and a punt return for a touchdown.

Celebrating after the game was the most fun, along with being escorted all the way back home. You know that you've accomplished the highest honor in the state as a team. I was proud of myself for my performance in the game and the whole season. I had proven myself to be a valuable part of the team and make big plays when the team needed them.

After the season, it was rewarding to see my teammates receive so many awards, like Dexter Taylor's and Jason Onyebuagu's Mr. Football position awards. I personally got rewarded by appearing on the Bill Polian, the president of the Indianapolis Colts, television show.

When the game was over, the first feeling I had was that I could not wait to do it again.

Junior Andre Nicholson is lifted by teammates in their state victory against Hamilton SE. The game was dedicated to Nicholson because of his career ending injury.

The team poses for a picture after their route against Hamilton Southeastern. The long, strenuous season came to an end with their third consecutive state championship.

"We were all very focused; we really wanted to win the state title for Coach Brooks.

-Tim Armstrong, 12"

TIM ARMSTRONG

IMPACT: Senior state runner and four year starter.

All meets this season were very important, but everyone has their best meets every year. I had my meets when I did well and meets when I didn't do so well, but I'd have to say my most important meet, state, I did the best of my ability.

State is people's most important meet, I did well at the meet, placing 40th with a time of 16:16, but I think I could have done better.

As a senior, I had a lot of responsibility on the team, but Jimmy Hodges took more of a leadership role than I did.

It feels really good being an impact person, but then if you choke you feel very disappointed in yourself.

We didn't do anything different this year, we stuck to the fundamentals and simply listened to our coaches.

My ultimate goal this year was winning state, and as a team, we accomplished this with a perfect 221-0 record

To prepare for my meets, I would get plenty of rest and try to stay relaxed. This year the pressure was on, being a senior, it was my last chance to do anything big.

During the pre-season, we practice basically everyday at 7 a.m. Most of the runners even ran every Sunday. We did all we could to become the best we could possibly be. We also went to team camp for a week right before school started.

Before most meets I got a little nervous, but nothing changed at the meet. There's always a little bit of nervousness before important races.

The mood on the starting line at state was really intense. We were all very focused; we really wanted to win the state title for Coach Brooks.

I'm also excited for next year because five of our seven varsity runners are returning to compete. That gives our team high hopes of winning another state title.

Steven Prefontaine said, "To give anything less than your best is to sacrifice the gift." I believe this is how our team thought. We all tried to follow this saying and give it all we had. The season was one to remember, and being part of this team was very rewarding.

I love Coach Brooks, he was one of the most understanding, determined, and kind-hearted coaches we could have had. He did everything to benefit the team, and the entire team became close with him. He was amazing, and we were all very happy to be able to reward him and ourselves with the state championship title.

Winning didn't quite set in until days after the meet. When it finally did, it felt like we got what we worked for all season long.

-De'Sean Turner, 11

DE'SEAN TURNER
IMPACT: 2nd place in state and first team All-American

I placed second individually this year in the state, and Semi-State meets. I would say Semi-State was my most important meet, because if you don't do well in Semi-State, you won't advance to state. My time in the Semi-State meet was 15:07, and my first loss in the season. I had only two loses this year, coming in second both times during the season, both to my toughest competition, Brock Hagerman, from Pendleton Heights. He was the only one who seemed to be able to surpass me.

Before most meets, the team would always seclude ourselves as the varsity team. We would go off to a random place, and basically hide from others, trying to get focused and stay on task. We are always anxious and nervous to start the meet.

The top seven runners changed throught out the season. There was always a battle for the seventh man. The top six included Ondraious Richardson, Jimmy Hodges, Tim Armstrong, Cody Brooks, Micah Aldrich and myself.

At the starting line, I was basically thinking the race was going to be fast, and I needed to get out in the front early. I was nervous more at the semi-state meet more than state. The only reason I was nervous at the state meet was because it was the last meet as a team, and my last time running with certain people, and it was a time to make impressions that would last in their minds.

Being an impact person was something I consider a large accomplishment. It is almost the same feeling I had when I was on the podium after winning State.

Every team has pieces to the puzzle. With ours, we have the front-runner, the trail runners, the fifth man and the two anchors, I had a large impact being the front-runner. If I didn't perform to my ability in any way, the puzzle wouldn't be complete.

Winning didn't quite set in until days after the meet. When it finally did, it felt like we got what we worked for all season long. All the practices and things we endured as a team were all worth it. Being on a state champion team is something we are all proud of. Being the first state champion cross-country team at Warren is something very special, and something none of us will ever forget.

After the regular season was over, we traveled to different parts of the country, including Orgeon and Wisconsin. At the Foot Locker Regionals in Wisconsin, I placed 6th, which advanceded me to Nationals, which took place in San Diego. I ran really well there, with a time of 15:29 and placing 15th.

I'm very excited for next year, it's going to be another opportunity to advance the team.

But the season didn't end...

Eight of the young men on the team competed in the Foot Locker Regionals in Kenosha, Wisconsin. During this meet, De'sean Turner was able to show his ability, advancing him to the Foot Locker Nationals in San Diego, California. Before this meet took place though, the team had one more meet in Portland, Oregon where the top 20 teams in the Nation competed. They placed 15th, and Turner placed 6th. During the national race in San Diego, Turner placed 15th with a time of 15:29, he placed as the 2nd junior in the race, making him the number two returning runner to high school cross country in the United States next year.

KEEPING THE PACE

MELANIE GILBERT
IMPACT: Senior and fastest runner on the team

Last year, I didn't attend Warren, I attend Alrington High School, and the team did well last year but this year, I was highly anticipating the season.

It was my most important meet all year: semi-state. I placed in both Sectionals and Regionals with 3rd and 13th place finishes, respectively.

I began working harder than ever the week before, preparing myself for it. I ate healthier, and even got up early in the mornings to run. My mom drove the car next to me pacing me, and reminding me of my time.

The day of the meet drew nearer and I continued to get more nervous as each minute of the day passed by.

Finally, Saturday morning arrives. As I drove myself to school and prepared for the bus ride to Central State, in downtown Indianapolis, for this very important meet.

The top seven varsity runners in this meet included seniors Carly Weidman, and Whitney Turner, juniors LaTasha Williams, Kandi Jenkins, and Carmen Alejo, and freshman Emily Wright.

Before the meet, we were all having fun and were relaxed. This meet was probably the first time we all came together and talked, and enjoyed ourselves. We usually keep to ourselves and stay focused, but I was surprised at how well we were all getting along. We were constantly laughing at each other having a good time with ourselves and enjoying the season. The best part of us all getting along was that we all ran well.

The race was just around the corner. I stretched out, and began looking around at other girls who were preparing to run as well.

Some of the competition included Lawrence North, Center Groove, Franklin Central and Lawrence Central. Each one of these schools is very competitive, and very well trained. We knew what to expect, and we all just went out and tried our hardest.

There was always one girl who I wished to beat. Her name was Rachel Ehret, from Lawrence North. I wasn't able to beat her at this specific meet, but there is always track. She brings out the best in me.

It was finally time. We warmed up and eventually made our way to starting line. The mood on the starting line was very tense. Everyone was looking forward to it, and hoping for the best.

The gun finally sounded and we all raced off, and I knew this was my most important meet. I did my best at this meet also. I had a time of 15:26, which was my personal record. I placed 31st place, and only the top 15 advanced. I was 11 seconds from advancing, which was the most disappointing part.

I was happy with my performance, and I am happy to have the impact I did on the team for the 2005 season.

Team chemistry fails to build against tough teams

TIME WON'T WAIT

JOSIE HARVEY
IMPACT: Senior and four year varsity player

Before every game, I always have to go get a breath of fresh air with my teammates during the junior varsity game.

It helps me to relax and calm my nerves. The second-round sectional game versus Cathedral was no different.

That game was the most important because Cathedral is such a storied program. I was excited because Kylie Kent, the setter, returned from an injury that kept her from playing. Brittani Oliver also had returned from an ankle injury, so our full lineup was back.

Our team has never been beat by anybody in Sectional every year, except Cathedral, so the feeling was tense, but still exciting.

We had good preparation before the game with the first-round sectional victory against Manual. Cathedral was trying to scout that game, but Coach Hagist sat out all the starters. I enjoyed relaxing that game. Although I do think that being challenged more would have been better for the team.

During the first game against Cathedral, I thought that we didn't play quite like a team or like we even knew how. There were uncharacteristic errors. We were sluggish and I think a little nervous.

In the second and third game we came within a few points to Catherdral, but by the time we got ourselves together, it was a little too late to try and claim a victory.

Our team always kept good chemistry and friendship off the court; sometimes it just took too long to mesh on the court.

I think the lack of chemistry at times hurt us but, we couldn't be perfect.

Being the only senior was a leadership role I think I owned up to pretty well. I played varsity since my freshman year, so I could relate to the underclassmen and how they felt about playing at a varsity level and not necessarily being that experienced.

Being awarded All- County and an Eastside All-Star by The Indianapolis Star was great. It was surprising because there are a lot of great volleyball players in the state. I was honored.

At the end of the year I was awarded the best offensive player by the coaches and the team. That was the biggest honor for me because that meant that the coaches and the players recognized my offensive power and potential.

Although it was my last year, I think between the leadership I showed and Mr. Hagist's coaching, next year's team should be able to beat plenty of top ranked teams. I don't anticipate a loss to Cathedral for the team next year.

Team's rough season makes the future look brighter

KYLE NELSON
IMPACT: Varsity player

I have played soccer for awhile now, and whether it's a big game, or just practice, I take it very seriously.

This season was frustrating for the boys soccer team. It seemed like no matter how hard we tried, we just kept losing. There is one game that sticks out in my mind as one that meant a lot to me and my team.

The Roncalli game was our last game before Sectionals. Coach Jacobs told us that we needed to play well to have the momentum before Sectionals. This was because we had a tough past two weeks with pretty big losses.

Before the game, all I was thinking about was having a good warm up and being mentally prepared for what I needed to do. We were playing a team that had a lot of talented players. I was sure that we were going to need to play our best to even have a chance at beating them.

I know I'm not the most important person on my team, but I have my important spot on the team just like everyone else.

I believe I'm a good asset. We have a great team; however, we were still adjusting with each other and trying to build confidence in our play.

Coming into this game, I was injured. But there was no doubt in my mind that it was really important that I be there for my team. I hadn't really given myself a choice. In the end, I was glad I played because I ended up making two big saves that helped us take the lead.

The game ended with a score of 3 to 1 with our team beating Roncalli. It was one of the greatest victories of our season. The entire team played well in that game. I was really glad that they did, because this game was really important. The fact that we won was a nice touch too, and is always nice to have on your record.

Next year, I hope we have a better season, which would include, of course, a lot more wins. I know our team will have to work even harder next season to ensure us a better record.

I also hope we're strong enough to make it to finals; however, if we play as hard as we did in that Roncalli game, then I am happy with that.

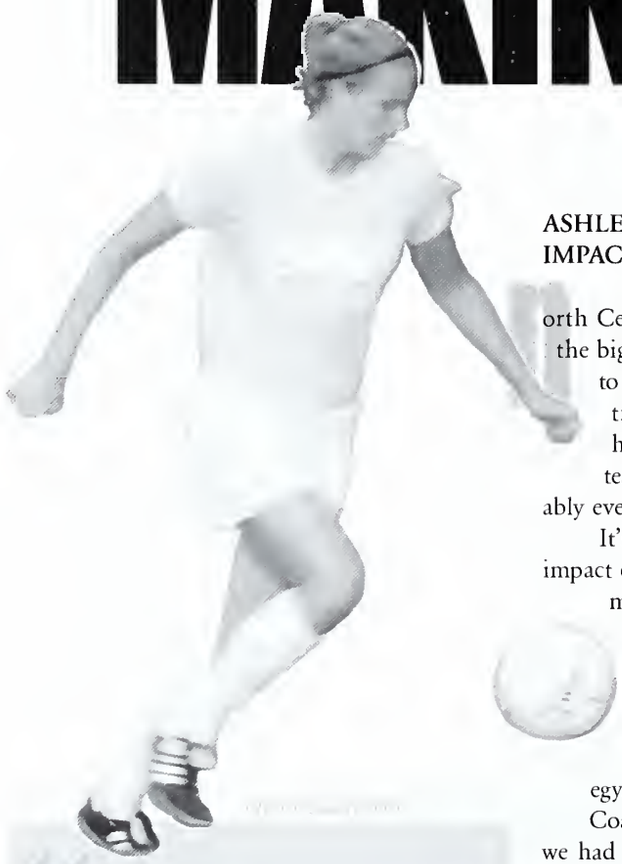
Girls get stronger, set records and gain confidence

RECORD MAKING



"It's hard to say I, by myself, made an impact for my team. I think the whole team made an impact."

-Ashley Seehase, 12

ASHLEY SEEHASE
IMPACT: Scored a record 42 goals in her career

orth Central was the game of the season. It was the biggest game for us so far this year. We had to beat the team whom had always given us trouble. With the amount of seniors we had playing, and as much talent on the team, it was the best chance we were probably ever going to have to beat them.

It's hard to say that I, by myself, made an impact on our team. I think that the whole team made an impact, especially during the North Central game.

From the get go, we could tell this wasn't going to be treated like any other game. Our pep talk before the game wasn't full of critiquing and strategy.

Coach Roberts just told us to make sure that we had fun. This was something new to us. We always have fun, but for our coach to say that, it was a little different.

The first half started out great. I found myself playing extremely well, so well that I had scored the first three goals of the half.

I was also happy with how well our defense was playing. We left for half time with a 3-0 lead. We were all filled with a lot of adrenaline, but also still as nervous as ever. We didn't want to blow our the lead that we had worked so hard to build.

The second half didn't seem to go our way as much. North Central had scored three goals as well. Making matters worse, Cara Burchett had busted her head open and had to leave the game. My voice was important on the team, and I used it to keep my team motivated. The game was going to be close. With only a few minutes remaining, we were tied.

Then at the last minute, senior Courtney Roberts scored the final goal of the game, which gave our team the win. Thank God. It would have really crushed our team to prepare so much and work so hard for a win, but end up without it.

I don't know if I've ever in my life played any game that has left me with so much satisfaction and sense of joy. We went on to play in County and Regionals.

Unfortunately, we didn't make it any farther then that. While I'm upset about it, I'm glad that my team finally got to beat North Central and we could come together as a team for the win.

I am both glad and honored that I was able to be the impact person chosen for girls soccer. It will go among a few of the other things I've accomplished since being a part of the girls soccer team.

However, I know that I never could have been as successful as I was without my amazing team there to back me up. Overall, it was a really great season, to say the least.

JESSCICA THOMAS
IMPACT: 4 year Varsity Football Cheerleader
4 year Competition Cheerleader
1 year Varsity Basketball Cheerleader
2 year UCA All-American

Cheerleading was always a large and important part of my high school career.

I was shocked to hear that I was an impact, but it was a great feeling. I was very honored and touched.

The most important part of football season to me was the big games, such as Ben Davis and the games at the dome.

Cheering at the dome felt like a once in a lifetime experience, although we got lucky to cheer there five times.

We also cheered out of state once, in Kentucky, against Cincinnati Elder, and that was a great experience. Elder was ranked first in Ohio, and fourth in the nation.

Before all games, we would go over chants, which we used on average about fifty different ones a game, then we would practice stunting and tumbling.

My tumbling was very different. I wasn't able to do a back handspring, but I could do everything else. And my tucks were the strongest part of my tumbling.

The most embarrassing time I had was my freshman year, at the game against Carmel. I do a round off, back tuck and I overrated and went into a double tuck and landed straight on my back. I remembered everyone gasping, but I just got up, laughed and told everyone I was all right.

As everyone knows, the fight song was an important part of every game. We'd do it basically every time we heard the song being played, when we scored a touch down, and of course for all victories.

Coach Traci Bush was my favorite coach. She makes things less stressful, and was very easy to talk to. She was more of a friend than a teacher.

I always enjoyed cheering with one of my best friends, Jenell Brown. We always got in trouble for goofing off during games. We would get so involved in the games and forget we are cheering. It was always hilarious to both of us.

Competition was always a big part of our season. We would take about four months to perfect our performance.

Normal competitions usually consist of a lot of practice. The night before you roll your hair, and you wear tons of make up to get ready for the performance. . Then you have about two and a half minutes full of dance, cheer, jumps, stunts, tumbling and running around. It takes a lot of energy and is harder than most people think.

The best our squad has ever done was my junior year; we competed in Nationals and placed fourth.

Cheering was a large part of my life, and it was always a great experience to cheer for victorious teams.

SECOND TIME AROUND

MARCUS THOMAS
IMPACT: leading scorer and All-MIC member

This year was truly my best year in playing Warren basketball.

I averaged 15 points, four rebounds, and two assists, but aside from my statistics, I felt that our team showed more teamwork than ever before. I was not the only player that made an impact on the team. We had five returning seniors that helped lead the team. We also had many sophomore and junior guards step up for us.

This season's record was much better than records in the past and our hard work during the regular season helped us prepare for the state tournament. It had been three years since the team made it to the third round of Sectionals, so we were anxious to get past there.

The first-round game against Cathedral was really tough and so was the second-round game against Lawrence Central. We started off really sluggish in those games, but were able to come out on top. I think two really close games back-to- back helped us to be ready and play hard.

Lawrence North was the number one team in the nation, so some people thought we would be intimidated, but we were not. We felt like if we could make it past the first two teams, anything could happen.

Before the game, Coach Heady told us to just have fun and play hard because we had nothing to lose. I have to put myself in certain situations before games and mentally tell myself what I am going to do.

The first half of the game we did really well compared to the first game we played against them during the regular season.

The second half the game just started to slip away from us completely. We thought we played as hard as possible. Some of our shots were not falling. Lawrence North's defense was a big factor in us not being able to win. We lost 39-64.

My emotions did not really kick in until I got home. That was my last game as a senior Warrior basketball player. I can honestly say that I will miss the black and gold colors that I wore across my chest with pride.

One thing that motivated me throughout the whole season was me and my teammates did not get enough respect. When we would walk out on a court, we were looked at like we were automatically going to lose.

I just want to be better and respected as a basketball player that works hard like anyone else.

At the end of the season I was named to the All-MIC team along with sophomore Walter Offutt and I was named to the Indianapolis Star Super Team. Those honors were big for me and they helped me deal with the season finally being over.

Lawrence North was the number one team in the nation, so some people thought we would be intimidated, but we were not.

JUST ONE MORE

LIA MOORE
IMPACT: Senior and Best Defensive Player

I think we did well the whole season and we accomplished many goals. We had more team camaraderie than last season. It made us stronger, helped us win more games and have each other's back.

Before games, I always act a little crazy. I have to get everyone hyped. We had eight seniors. We were more mature with handling situations and so I think that also helped us win games, too.

I did not really have a close relationship with Coach Kirkpatrick. I understood him and he understood me. he knew the game of basketball very well and I respected him for that.

The first round game against Cathedral was very important. In my four years here we never beat them in Sectionals. Just like every night I had to guard the best player, and Lauren Sturtevant was highly ranked in the state. I think I was underrated because nobody ever paid attention to me.

That game was close until the very end. She tried to score the last winning basket, but I stopped her with my defense. I felt relieved and happy that I contributed in a big way to the win that we had never had.

The second round game against Lawrence Central was a little less competitive, but it still was good preparation for the championship game.

Before the championship game against Lawrence North, I felt like we had the best chance at winning. We beat them earlier in the season and they had never been a problem in prior seasons, but I think our team had a sort of complacent attitude. We were favored to win the Sectional especially after we beat Cathedral.

I once again had to guard another highly ranked guard. I got kneed in the thigh so I played most of the game in pain. The first half we came out really slow and were down by ten, but we came back before the end of the half. The second half was a similar scenario because we got down by ten points. I felt that the referees were a bit unfair, but we could not blame them for our sluggish play.

The game came down the last the ten seconds. We were down by one point. Sophomore Lauren Shepard drove to the basket for the last play and a foul was called with no time left on the clock. She had to shoot two free throws with no one else on the line with her. She missed both of them.

It was heartbreaking to lose the game the way we did. It was also hard to cope with the fact that was our last game. I felt a lot of pressure because Lawrence North's guard scored 31 points and it was my responsibility to contain her.

At the end of the season I won Set A Good Example Award and Best Defensive Player. Those awards were important because it showed that I helped my team by setting a positive example for playing defense and how to carry myself.

CARL GRIFFIN
IMPACT: 4 time Varsity Wrestler
Weight classes: 135, 140, 145, 152, and 160.
State qualifier at 145 in 2006.

Semi-state was my most important meet. It was my senior year, and being a captain, along with senior Bobby Baker, Chris Conte and Josh Norris, both juniors, gave me the inspiration to give it my all.

The thought that it could potentially be my last meet was always going through my mind. I wanted to get out there and wrestle hard from the beginning to the end.

Before most meets I would warm up. Bobby usually warmed me up, then he suffered a knee injury, Josh Norris then took his place, for the later part of the season. Most people warm up more than me though. I've learned that I used to warm up too much and get myself tired before important meets, so now I just try to focus and relax more. I'll usually just walk around, staying in motion, or just take a seat on the maps and look around, take it what is going on. Chuck Woodard, sophomore, and myself would sometimes try to break dance, but we weren't very good.

Semi-State is always hard. It's the meet that gets you to state. A lot of good wrestlers get out during Semi-State and don't make it. It was inspirational to know that they didn't make it, but I had the chance to. Also knowing that Jeff Woodard really wanted me to make it, made me want it even more.

My coach, Coach Ledbetter, is my role model in life. He gets you motivated, and makes you work hard in practice, and mentally prepares you for the meets ahead of you.

The morning of Semi-State arrived, and I just checked my weight and tried to stay relaxed but get focused as much as I could.

I wasn't nervous before most meets, but Semi-State was different. I got pretty nervous because it could be my last meet, my last match of my senior year.

It came time for the meet to go underway. During the meet you will start to think about what move you will be able to work, but he might move a certain way and then you will have to go for a completely different move. It comes instinctively because your body does not really have to even think about it.

I started out wrestling Kyle Doson from Manual, who I defeated. Then I went on to the second round and won again against Nate Cravens of South Montgomery. I knew that was the most important meet of the day, it was the one that advanced me to state.

I placed fourth all together at Semi-State. The top four advance. It was a great feeling advancing to State, because I knew a lot of the younger wrestlers looked up to me, and hopefully I rubbed off on them and they picked up my excellent work ethic.

Boys and girls swimmers work to make the cut; divers impress all

CORY JOHNSON
IMPACT: Award Winning Diver

Swimming has never been something that I liked. In fact, I hate it, but when I found out that I could dive in high school, I jumped for the chance.

It seemed to pay off. I've been pretty successful so far this season. It feels good to do something and do it well. Even though I am on the track team, I know diving is something I'll always feel comfortable doing.

I'm probably the only athletic person in my family; therefore, I guess I'm considered the star. It's not a bad thing, but I don't want to feel a lot of pressure.

This season wasn't that great for our team, but for me I did alright. I actually made it to state which is something that some teams are never able to do.

I'm not saying I did good at state, but I'm glad I went. It was one of the best experiences I could have. Just being there was a learning experience. I would watch the other divers and see how they dealt with things, and then thought how I could do the same.

Being a part of the team I am pays off. I have a coach who is strict, but only wants the best for all of the team. He works us hard. Our practices are very intense.

The people on my team are good people. We occasionally are able to hang out outside of school. I think it's good that we don't just see each other when the time for a meet comes.

As far as goals for me, I plan to dive next year as well. It's something I have a passion for and it's impacted my life a great deal.
Being on this team this year has taught me to be a leader. I think that will help me a lot next year when I'm a senior.

My inspiration for everything is my father. He's someone who has worked hard all of his life. I plan to do the same.

Girls head to state for the first time in years

BRITNEY CANNON
IMPACT: Varsity Gymnast

It's never been in my nature to take myself too seriously. That's why I loved being on the gymnastics team this year. Yes, we worked hard, but we made sure we also had fun throughout the season.

Ever since I was three years old, gymnastics has been a huge part of my life. It's one of the things in my life that has always come easy to me, and it's always something that I have enjoyed.

I'm only a sophomore now, and my team mainly consists of seniors. It may seem like it would be hard to be on a team like that, but my team has always been great and that kind of thing doesn't matter.

As far as practicing goes, my team stuck to the normal, everyday schedule. We had practice after school and prepared mentally. I didn't want to overwork myself.

This year was a great year for our gymnastics team. For the first time in such a long time we made it to state. That felt huge to us!

Honestly, the chance of coming out of state victorious was something that I knew wasn't likely to happen. It wasn't that I didn't want to win, but I like to be honest with myself.

I wanted to make sure that while at state, I would take the opportunity to have a great experience, which is what I had. I'm the type of person who sets goals, but I won't stress myself over them. I hate that.

I think that this is the best team I've been a part of. Our coaches Debbie and Shelly are amazing and great people. They're the type of people that will care for you whether you mess up or not. While the coaches are great, it's the girls on my team that keep me around. They're such fun girls and very easy to get along with.

At this moment I'm not yet sure what I'll be doing next year. I love gymnastics; however, I don't know if I want to do it my junior year. I do know that I want to do it my senior year. That's important to me.

Overall, my experience on the team has been great. I've learned so much in my short time on the team. I still have two years of high school left. We'll see where I go from here, but I hope to succeed no matter what I decide to do.

AMANDA TOLIVER
IMPACT: 4-year tennis player

This is my senior year of high school and my last year playng tennis, at least in school. I think I will still play for fun, but I don't plan on playing while I am in college. I believe my brother will be the new "tennis star" in the family.

For the past four years, tennis has been a huge part of my life. With a father who's a huge tennis fan, player, and coach, it would be hard to not have the tennis gene. Don't get me wrong, I love the game, but I always feel that I have a lot of pressure riding on me.

I am glad that I played my senior year at Warren. We got a new coach this year and things were a lot different than last year. Even though Coach Hanan works us really hard during our practices, it's worth it when we can last longer in our matches.

One positive thing that's changed is our team's chemistry. We get along a lot better than we did last year, but we also have a lot of freshman so the team still has a lot of growing to do.

Our team has changed quite a bit since last year. Last year we had a bunch of seniors on the team and this year we only have myself. It affected us a lot, in my opinion, because our seniors were our leaders and losing them was not good at all.

I think another thing that hurts our team is our lack of experience. Some of the girls on our team hadn't even picked up a racket until a little before, if not during, high school. It sucks when you play a team of girls that have been playing since they were five or six years old. It shows us all that we have a lot of catching up to do.

Overall, I'm glad that tennis has been such a large part of my life. It's nice to be considered as someone who has made an impact. I think that is much due to my parents, they have been there for me every step of the way. I'm very thankful for them and for the girls on my team who will always have a place in my heart.

4 YEAR VARSITY

really enjoy golf. I do. It's something I've done since I was four years old. I'm always practicing. Rain or shine. Inside or outside. It's one of the things I enjoy most of the time. I take a lot of time to perfect my swings, putting, and chipping.

Golf to me is a 99.3 percent mental sport. (Of course, it takes some athletic ability, but a lot of concentration.)

I look up to my dad; he's had a great impact on me and my playing ability. To be able to have an impact like he did is something I'm very proud of. Its one of the accomplishment in my golf career I'm really appreciating.

One of the most important meets is always the conference meet. The MIC is very competitive and includes many tops teams such as Center Grove and Carmel. These two teams are very competitive. But you just have to practice and come together as a team in order to help advance the team further in invites and meets.

This year I have had the biggest impact during the Southmont Invitational. The team placed second all together, and I got second overall, shooting a 73.

It's always a great experience to metal in a meet, which I've had the pleasure of doing many times.

Having this position as an impact person is something I've very grateful for. It's good to know that I can make some sort of a difference in the school and athletic department.

I like hitting with my 2 iron, I use it often. I normally hit about 230 yards on average.

Golf is very important to me, and I love always have the opportunity to improve my ability and performance.

OVER THE FENCE

"Baseball is life to me, and I'm glad to be apart of it in so many different ways.
-Murphy Bragg, 12

MURPHY BRAGG
IMPACT: 4 YEAR VARSITY PITCHER AND OUTFIELDER

It's always great to accomplish anything you've been working towards. One of my overall greatest accomplishments in baseball was being named All County and All Conference during my junior year.

But, being an impact person is one I might have to add to that list. The pressure gets to you every now and then, but overall it's a great experience, and I feel honored knowing that people look up to me and have faith in me to advance and lead the team as well.

This year one of our main goals was to get through sectionals and win state! Winning state is always a goal for every team though, right?

I usually prepare a lot before games. I go out and throw about 30 or 40 pitches, and put in my red contacts that I use to help block out the sun. They're pretty cool, Casey Pollard, sophomore, also uses the lenses.

This year we've had a pretty exciting season. We started off a little slow, but we've came together as a team and have just been playing our best.

This year the Terre Haute North game is one I'd like to remember. We won 4-2, and at the time they were third in state.

I pitched this game; it was good to know I help lead the team to another win.

Another game I played a major role in would have to be the Carmel game. Although we lost 1-0, they were first in state.

Pitching, to me, is difficult, but I love the challenge. The hardest thing would have to be consistency, because one game you can be right on, and then come back and blow the whole game.

Location is also vital to pitching, you have to know just where to throw the ball depending on what pitch is signaled.

I think my fastball would have to be my best pitch. I normally pitch in the upper 80s for this one.

My change-up needs a little improvement, it's a little weaker than others, but I just started throwing that pitch this year.

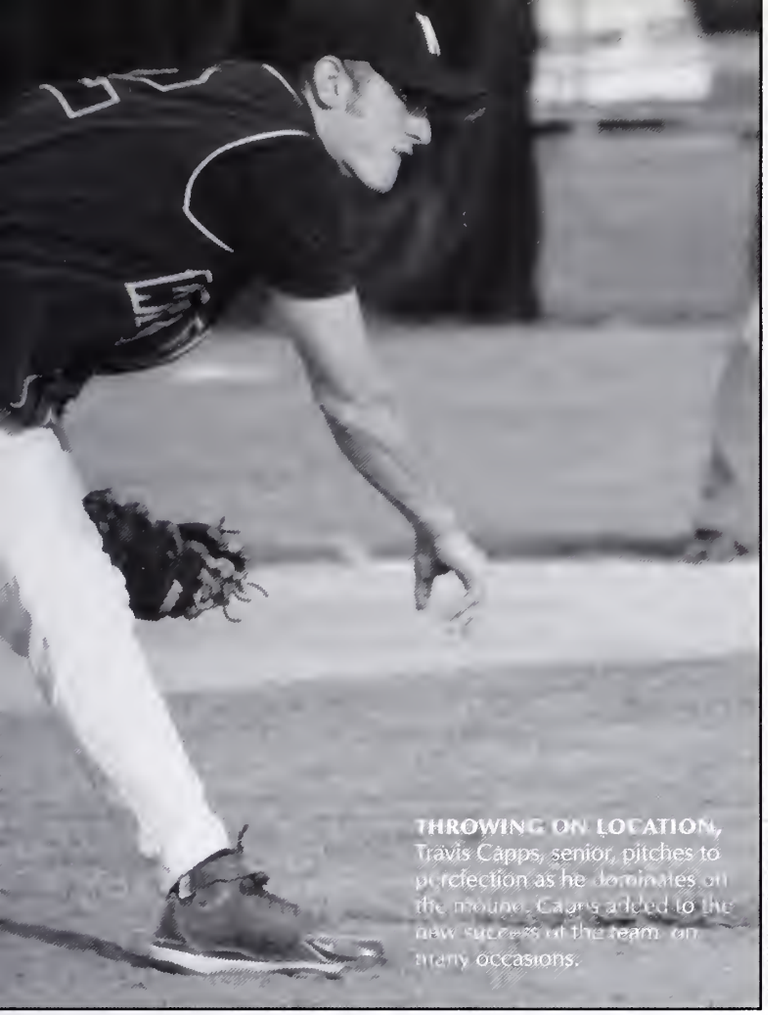
I average about 85 pitches a game when I do pitch, and I usually always open up the game.

When I'm not pitching I play right field, which I love to do. I don't get enough chances to get out there and pitch that often.

This being my senior year, I've just tried to contribute as much as I can and help the team out.

The coaches are great. They know baseball, they know what to tell me to do, I enjoy that.

Baseball is life to me, and I'm glad to be apart of it in so many different ways.



THROWING ON LOCATION, Travis Capps, senior, pitches to perfection as he dominates on the mound. Capps added to the new success of the team on many occasions.

TERRA PAYSON
IMPACT: Varsity Pitcher

Being an athlete is something I was born with. Of everyone in my family, I'd say I got it from my dad. I've played softball for about eleven years now and it still means as much to me now as it did when I first picked up a softball.

When I started here at Warren, I knew I wanted to continue to play sports. I started out playing volleyball and I really enjoyed doing that for a little while. Then, after that season was over, I decided to go out for softball.

I was so incredibly shocked that I made the varsity team my freshman year; however, coming on to the team was a little intimidating. There were a lot of upper classman on the team and when the freshman and sophomores began taking their spots, there was some animosity there. I think that's one of the reasons we didn't play well. Our team lacked a lot of chemistry. We really didn't play well as a team.

This year has been a lot different. We have the same coaches as last year, but just like the players on our team, they continue to grow and become better. Our coaches also play the "good cop, bad cop roles" roles pretty well. It balances our team out well.

Starting out this season, our practices were very tough. We needed to be in top shape both physically and mentally if we wanted to beat some of our toughest competitors like Center Grove and Lawrence Central. So when we started to slack a little bit in our games, our coaches made us pay for it in our following practices. It's good for us. I think that it reminds us to play hard, no matter what.

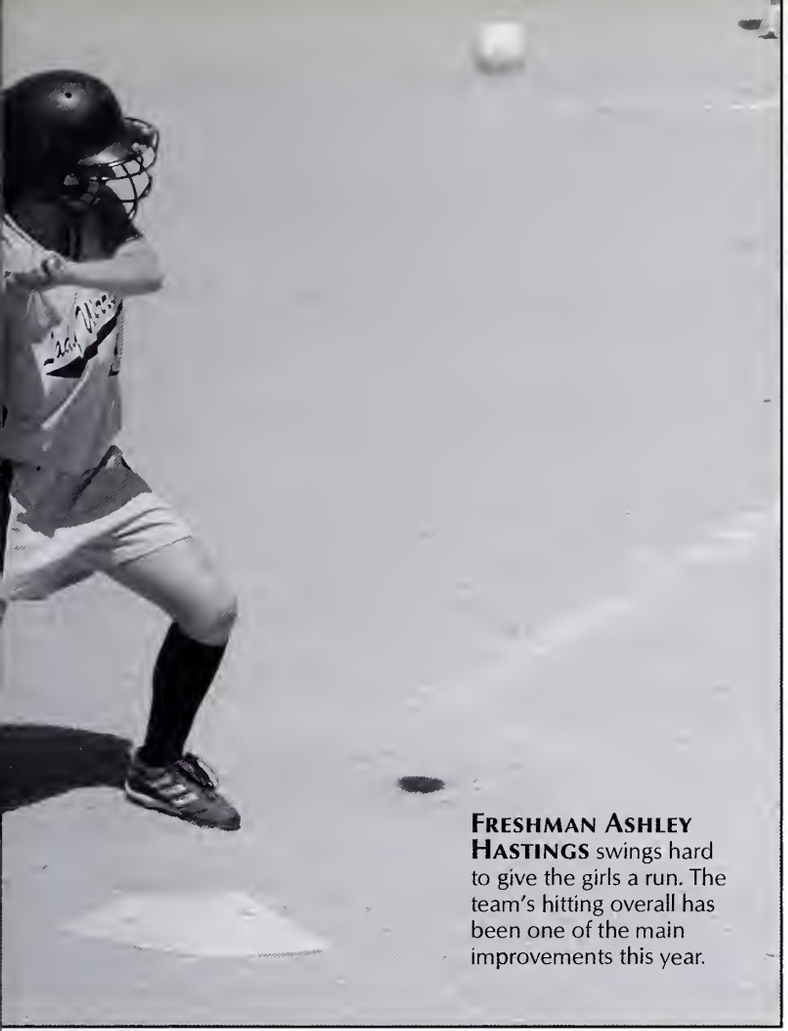
When it comes to goals that I've set for myself this season, I really want to improve on hitting. I am a pitcher so it usually comes before hitting for me. I think it would be really nice to one day be considered a double threat, being really good at batting and pitching.

I'm the type of person who really likes to be put to the test and I like having a lot of pressure on me. I work better that way. So when it comes to pitching, I want to always be able to hold my own and when my team needs it, take the lead to bring us a win.

I addition to playinig softball and volleyball, I'm on the newspaper staff at school and I am in Orchestra. It's a lot to handle all at one time and it can be a little difficult to keep everything balanced, but somehow I manage to get it all done.

I doubt that next year I will play Volleyball, but I do know that I want to continue playing softball throughout high school. It's just one of the things that I love doing and I wouldn't want to give it up.

I didn't know I'd ever be able to consider myself the one that makes a huge impact for our team. That's what we are, a team and we all play a role in making our team great. I'm just one little piece of a big working, softball-loving machine. I wouldn't trade that for anything else.



Freshman Ashley Hastings swings hard to give the girls a run. The team's hitting overall has been one of the main improvements this year.

PICKING UP THE PACE

Candyce McGrone
IMPACT: State Champion 200, runner up 100

I am glad to say that I had a great impact on the team and I did not even spend a whole season with the team. I think that I was surrounded by a much better team and environment than I was at Broad Ripple. When I decided to move in with my father, that was when I transferred to Warren. I did not run in middle school. I am glad that I decided to run because it has provided me something to do that I like, and that I am good at.

The MIC meet was most important regular season meet to me because I broke the 100 meter and 200 meter records. It felt good to break those records. I wish that we could have pulled a win instead of a tie with Ben Davis.

My motivation is always winning because I hate to lose. I am not a sore loser, but I always want to feel like I am the best. I had a few personal goals when I came into the season and I wanted to do better than my previous year at state. I wanted to win five state rings and in the end I was successful. I would have liked them to all to be blue, but four blue rings (200m, 4x1, 4x4) and one red ring (100m) is alright with me.

I do not know if many people understand the situation that I walked into. I did not know anybody, but my relationship with the coaches and teammates turned out pretty good. They welcomed me with open arms, and I felt just as comfortable there as my old school. The girls were all really nice and wanted to get to know me.

I think state is the best thing that could happen to a runner in his or her career, and I am blessed to know that I am capable of making it every year. Before the meet I was somewhat tense, but I still came with my game face on. In the 100 meter dash preliminaries I experienced an unexpected tumble, but I still managed to run an 11.7 which qualified me for Nationals. In the 100 meter dash finals, I took second place which was frustrating being that I knew I could have done better. After the meet I was somewhat disappointed by the 100 meter dash, but still satisfied because we won as a team. That meant more than any of my individual accomplishments.

In the 200 I was successful in achieving state champion status. We have a strong 4x1 and 4x4 relay teams. In the 4x4 I nearly lost the race because I ran out of gas. It was very close in the end between us and North Central, but we came out on top.

Each individual did their part to achieve the goal of bringing the championship to Warren Central, for the first time in girls track history. This was only the second time in history that a girl's team won a state title.

As a team we continuously motivate each other to achieve the highest goal possible. I am looking forward to the next two seasons at Warren Central for track.

RUNNING WITH THE BEST

The mood after Warren Relays was quiet because the team was in shock. We were so close and did not do what we set as our goal.

-Devin Pipkin, 11

DEVIN PIPKIN
IMPACT: 3-year varsity member, All-American

I have had so much fun at Warren for the past three yeas running track and I cannot wait for next year. I am glad that I have had such an impact on the team, but my most memorable meet would have to be Warren Relays.

Mr. McNulty is a coach that I truly look up to. He is really vocal and will tell you when you are not working hard. You can tell that he really cares about his team.

There are players on the team that I really looked up to, Joey Hodges gave 110 percent every practice. He is one of the hardest working people that I know. De'Sean Turner also motivates me because he is already on top, but he always works hard because he knows that people are coming to take his spot.

The meet was on a Thursday so we had almost a full week to prepare. Monday we practiced hard because we were just getting back from the weekend. Tuesday was still difficult and Wednesday we just worked on hand-offs, block starts, and final things before the race.

Warren Relays is a 42 year old tradition that is important to uphold because we have the advantage. It is setup to be a close meet because there are only four field events and eight track events. The team had a six year winning streak, so we wanted to add to that.

We were confident with our competition, but we weren't complacent.

Ben Davis is always a rival, but especially this season. They have the same athletes as us, the people in the same years as our runners and similar times. They always got us in the field events because we were not strong in that area.

I ran in the sprint medley. There is two 100m legs, a 200 meter leg, and a final 400 meter leg. I ran the 200 meter. That team broke the school record by a second, but we still came in third place to Ben Davis and Southport.

I also ran the 4x1 anchor position. The 4x1 was the last race of the meet and we were tied with Ben Davis at 77 points.

Joey Hodges ran the last leg and we thought we had the race won, but we got disqualified because I ran out on the track too soon to celebrate. I altered the steps of a Southport runner crossing the finish line, but Ben Davis was disqualified too.

Coach McNulty said that the team could not really blame me for the loss because I had been carrying the team the whole season anyway.

The mood after the meet was quiet because the team was in shock. We were so close and did not do what we set as our goal. I was emotional and so was the rest of the team because the meet was so intense, but we learned from our mistakes.

Even though this meet was memorable, I could not wait for state, so we can claim the title we deserve.

STATE CHAMPIONSHIPS
IMPACT: Team

This year had been an exciting year for Warren athletics, but it was all wrapped up by both the boys and girls track teams winning state.

The girls came into the season underrated and in the shadow of rival and defending state champions, Fort Wayne-Northrop. They slowly but surely began to knock down barriers during the season. They beat the six time defending state champs Fort Wayne-Northrop during an early season meet, won County and MIC for the fifth time in six years.

"We had a positive attitude going into the state meet. The coaches prepared us well and asked us to start with the end in mind," said junior Jasmin Foster. The Lady Warriors did just that in spectacular fashion.

Sophomore Candyce McGrone placed second in the 100 meter dash and first in the 200 meter dash. Melanie Gilbert scored sixth place in the 800 meter run, Erica Terry scored seventh in shotput and Ashley Seehase scored eighth in the 200 meter dash.

The 4x100 meter relay team scored first. The 1,600 meter relay team of Melanie Gilbert, Ashley Seehase, Jaminnia States and Candyce McGrone also placed first in the final race of the state meet. A photo finish helped determine the new state champs for 2006.

The boys team was just the opposite, they were favored to win state from the beginning. Their goal was to do what everyone expected and more.

They won MIC and County and had returning runners with state experience in Joey Hodges, Devin Pipkin and De'Sean Turner.

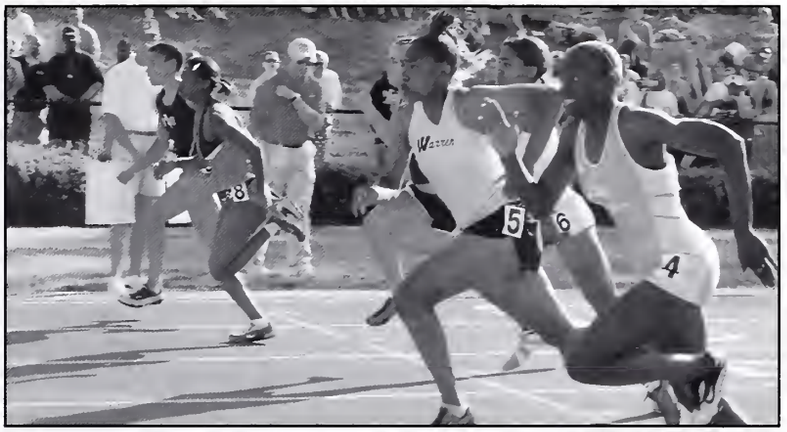
The boys had one first-place finish, five second-place finishes and another five more top-seven finishes which helped seal the deal for the Warriors. They won the state title by 29 points.

The 400 meter relay team of Joey Hodges, Anthony Vaden, D'Juan Richardson and Devin Pipkin placed first and set a new school record. The 3,200 meter relay team placed second and the 1,600 meter relay team finished seventh, both setting new school records. Junior Devin Pipkin placed second in the 100 and 200 meter dashes. Senior Joey Hodges placed second in the 300 meter hurdles and third in the 100 meter high hurdles.

Junior De'Sean Turner placed second in the 1,600 meter race. He ran 4:08.78 to finish just .07 of a second behind.

"I did not want to see anybody in front of me," said Turner, "I wanted it to be that way the whole time."

The boys team was only the second team in state history to win both state in boys track and cross country.



Sophomore Candyce McGrone comes around the curve of the 200 meter dash as she tries to finish strong. McGrone won the 200 meter dash and placed second in the 100 meter dash.

the gift of giving

We all search for our place in life, something we can do to make a positive impact in the world. At 17 years old, senior, Sarah Hairston has found a way to make that happen. Her life consists of constantly giving to those less fortunate than herself. Very active in her community, she volunteers as an office assistant at Ambassadors for Children and brings the beautiful sounds of gospel music to local homeless shelters and nursing homes with her church.

However, if you ask Sarah what her most fulfilling venture to date was, she would proudly say providing the homeless people of downtown Indianapolis with food, water, and other much needed supplies. "You can never fully develop yourself until you learn how to help others," Hairston says.

Despite her busy schedule Sarah still manages to find time to participate in other extracurricular activties like the praise team at her church, complete a leadership course at The Center for Leadership Development, be a member of the Warren Central marketing club DECA a passionate member of the Warren Central gospel chior, the Heritage Singers.

Sarah serves as a great example of how teens provide a postiive impact on today's society.

FACULTY IS NOT SO NEWLYWED

MRS. WRIGHT LAUGHS at Coach Wright's wrong answer. They shared that their first date was at a basketball game where Coach Wright had gotten them in for free.

The Not So Newlywed Game, hosted by the senior class council, tested some of the married faculty here at Warren. The couples involved were the Smiths, the Wrights, the Riggs, the Hawks, the Schroeders, and the Reiersons. Mr. Kent was the host for the event, and he kept the contestants on track and laughing. This game consisted of two rounds. The first being the women predicting what their husbands would answer to the not - so - ordinary questions, and then the husbands came back onto the stage to see if the answers matched. The same was done with the women leaving the stage and the males answering questions. Answers that matched counted as points, and the couple with the most points at the end were the winners. Mr. and Mrs. Hawks won the game with the most points at the end of both rounds. As it turns out they were the couple that had been together the longest. They have been together since 7th grade, and their first date was at a school skating party.

MR. KENT, as host of the game, kept the audience and contestants laughing.

THE HAWKS WON the game by knowing the most about each other, and recieving the most points throughout the game. The winners received gift cards to various places around the community.

THE SCHROEDERS DID well in the game, but came up short in points at the end. Mr. Schroeder revealed that what annoys him the most is when Mrs. Schroeder wears her earphones and listens to books on tape.

In the 1993 Wigwam, Mr. Brist and Mr. Comiskey take pies in the face during the Homecoming pep rally.

According to the 1991 "Wigwam," Mr. Comiskey and Mr. Greenlee act as the afternoons moderators at the homecoming pep session.

My Impact

Steve Comiskey

"It is teachers like Comiskey who inspire me to become a teacher. He is the epitome of what a teacher is," said junior Liz Tien, who had Mr. Comiskey for English this year.

Warren Central just will not be the same after English teacher Mr. Steve Comiskey retires this year after 29 years of teaching here.

Over the years, Mr. Comiskey has taught several different classes, including English for every grade level, Classical Literature, Speech, Advanced Comp I, and Great Books I and II. He is the kind of teacher that students love; the kind they get excited about when they see his name on their schedules.

Mr. Comiskey says that what he will miss most about the school are the students and he believes that is what has made him such an effective high school teacher is his concern for them.

"I have always been a sort of teacher of kids before I view myself as a teacher of subjects. I'm more worried about kids than about the actual subject," he said.

Mr. Comiskey's fellow teachers appreciate what he does for the students as well.

"He's been phenomenal. He's been everybody's dad," said Mr. Reed, English Department chair.

English teacher Ms. Alison Baldwin estimates that Mr. Comiskey has touched the lives of over 8,000 students during his 29 years at Warren Central, excluding any extracurricular activities he has sponsored.

"What else can I say? He has given so much, his absence in the years to come will be felt," Ms. Baldwin said.

Students agree with Mr. Reed and Ms. Baldwin.

"I like that Mr. Comiskey could teach college students and then come and teach high school students and be on our level," said junior Whittley Lewis, who had Mr. Comiskey for speech her sophomore year.

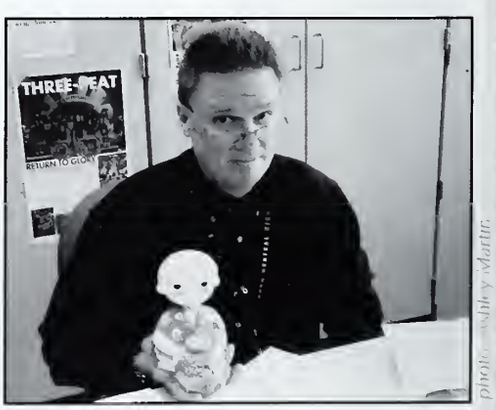
From the Desk of...

We have all seen those weird and interesting things on our teachers' desks. Many students are very curious and never miss an opportunity to ask questions about the wacky knickknacks teachers have adorning their work space. Those crazy contraptions come from a variety of places from around the world. Every item has its own story, and now that story is being revealed.

Curtains patterned with planets and plants decorate Mrs. Shropshire's room. She, along with many other teachers, enhance their classrooms just to feel a little more at home. The various posters and student artwork that adorn the walls go along with the different units the class is covering.

Sitting on Mr. Dayment's desk is a bank in the shape of an old man entitled "retirement fund." Students actually put money in the bank, and Mr. Dayment intends on using for his retirement.



Three instrument-playing frogs sit on Mr. Hilmer's desk. These frogs have come all the way from Acapulco and are actually real frogs encased in a molting.

Freshman year as the captain of the football team.

My Doug Ellington Impact

My name is Doug Ellington. I know many people from the sports and activities I have been involved with throughout my life up to this point. During my middle school years at Stonybrook, I played football, basketball, baseball, ran cross-country and track, and was involved in Scrabble Club, NJHS, and choir. I also have a brother, Brad Ellington, who is a junior this year, and I knew most of his friends already too. Having a brother that has already gone through everything I am going through had helped greatly, especially because I already have a good reputation with the teachers and coaches before they have even had me in their classes or on their team. Plus, my brother can give me tips and advice on the ins and outs of Warren Central.

Many people call me "little Brad" or "little Ellington," and I am sometimes asked if I feel like I am in Brad's shadow. I do not feel like I am. I have my own accomplishments to be proud of. Although Brad and I have done many of the same things, the recognition that I receive is on my own achievements, and I never feel as if they are hidden behind his spotlight of success. So far this year, I was elected as the freshman prince of the Christmas dance, and I was the quarterback of the freshman football team. I am currently in Student Council and Connection Show Choir. Most importantly, I work hard at my academics so I can be in the top 10 of my class. For the next part of the year, I plan on running track as I have in the years past. Last year, I was a part of the Stonybook 800-meter relay team that broke our school record. I hope to continue my success at the high school level and maybe run on the junior varsity track team. My many activities and hard work in high school may keep me busy now, but I know it will only help me make new friends and earn better scholarships in the long run.

What Would You Do if...

Imagine you are at your last choir concert of the year at which you received the big solo. Your dying grandmother came all the-way from Texas to watch you perform and you really want to impress her. Before going to the stage, you go through the words in your head. You walk out onto the stage and up to the microphone. Just as you open your mouth to start your solo, you forget the words. What would you do?

"I'd sing into the microphone how much I love my grandma."
- Hope Yarbrough

"Make it up and use my grandmother's name in it."
- Tiara Watkins

Envision that you are being recognized at a prestigious ceremony for all your volunteer work around the city including your help with Hurricane Katrina relief. You are really excited to be receiving an award and you invite numerous friends and family members. After they call your name, you begin walking up to the stage. Just as you are about to reach the podium, you slip and fall. What would you do?

"I would get up, laugh, and keep going."
- Katie Poole

"I would just try and laugh the whole thing off on stage."
- Daniel Cho

Double Take

Danielle Boyce

My twin sister and I are so different. We have completely different friends, hobbies, fashion, likes, dislikes, and pretty much everything else under the sun. Some people expect us to be exactly the same just because we look alike. We really are two completely different girls. We are less alike than people think. We are different in the way we choose to run our lives.

Everything we do is to express ourselves as individuals. We don't like being known as the "twins." We would rather be known for who we are, not who we look alike. At times being a twin is cool.

Kaitlin Boyce

Danielle and I are pretty different in just about every category. From our wardrobe, to the type of music we listen to. I would have to say that I am the tomboy between us, whereas Danielle is the more weary of us. I will always have her back though! Most people do actually think that since we are twins that we are exactly the same.

We couldn't be anymore different! I mean we do have some of the same interests in books, and we like a little of the same music. I think our attitudes are completely poles apart. I am the crazier and fun one, I mean don't get me wrong Danielle is just as fun, but it seems that she is more up tight. We have little arguments here and there, but one thing is for sure, I love her and she loves me!

Kathi Cunningham & Samantha Bailey

Kathryn and Samantha are in the freshmen academy sitting around the lockers before class starts.

When did you two meet?
Kathi: We met in 6th grade at Creston Middle School.
Samantha: We had some of the same classes.

What do you two for fun?
Kathi: We sometimes go over to each other's house or we both hang out with my boyfriend. And we like to go to the movies and to parties.
Samantha: We hang out a lot and I'll sometimes go with her to her karate practices. And we will come into school and work out in the morning a lot.

How did you two meet?
Kathi: We were in some of each other's classes together.
Samantha: Yeah, and I am friends with some of her friends, and so Kathryn and I got introduced to each other.

What do you like most about your friend?
Kathi: I like that you can tell Samantha pretty much anything and she is very trustworthy.
Samantha: I like her crazy personality and that we are both really into sports.

Do you two have any future plans together?
Kathi: We actually do not know.
Samantha: We haven't really talked about it.

My Impact

Qaniah Douglas

My name is Qaniah Douglas. I attended Creston Middle School last year. My friends call me "Q" for short and I love to have fun playing sports.

I play girls Junior Varsity basketball as a freshman and I am hoping to play Varsity next year as a sophomore. I am also going to run track. The events that I hope to prosper in are hurdles, high jump, and long jump. It will be very tough running track but I will try my hardest to succeed. Sports are a big part of my life but music is too. I sing and dance in Vivace Show Choir.

I enjoy choir, it is fun, but it is a lot of hard work preparing for contest and so on. The contest require a lot of energy and time. The people in choir are so cheerful and very helping. I enjoy getting to know them. I have learned a lot from them.

My mother, Monica, has been to many of my school and sports events. She is always there for me to cheer me on and she gives me helpful advice all the time. She encouages me in everything I do. I'm hoping to have a lot of fun my four years here at Warren Central. Sports, choir, and my mom are the biggest impacts in my life.

FIRST IMPRESSION

Samantha Vail

"I was very excited about being in high school since day one. I had always wondered how it would be, and it was more than I expected. I know most of the kids get bored with it after awhile, but I am still happy about it. There is something new and exciting almost everyday, and I always have fun. Having attended Catholic schools before coming to Warren, it's apparent the numerous freedoms available at Warren."

Le Thao

"My first impression of high school...all together it was okay at first, but still very scary. I remember, with me being so obviously short, that I was very overwhelmed before I even made it inside the school, and once I did, all I could think was "Wow." The building was so amazing, although I kept getting lost for about two weeks because it was so big. And don't even get me started on the books. I seriously thought they were joking when I started to get more and more books every day for each class. Um...I did enjoy the lunch lines, although they were too long."

David Alfonzo

"If anything, I thought of my experience like the Great Depression: everything was in a standstill. The hallways had a congested feel to it, because almost no one moved during the passing period. I didn't like anything about this school at first. I felt that they expected too much out of us as students. But after I got to know more people, as well as myself, things improved drastically and I started to recognize the good things about this school, like the Walker Career Center. I am still impressed that they have it connected to the school, and that it is accessible by the students."

Victoria Harris

"The school was huge! That's the first thing that I thought once I came in. It sort of reminded me of a mall. And there were so many people too! But all the walking around I had to do was really exhausting. Things that I liked? Well...I really liked my nutrition and wellness class...oh, and the lunch lines are great...and of course I like Mr. Clayton."

My Impact

D'Juan Richardson

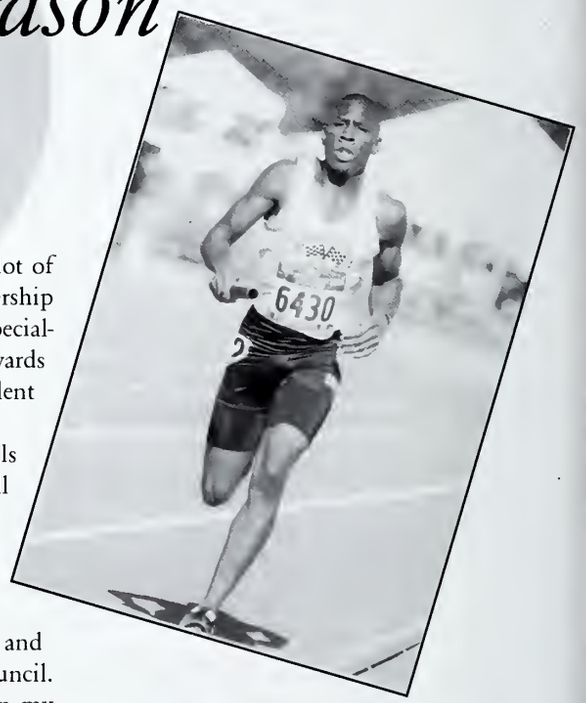
Showing leadership is something of a lot of importance to me. I have shown leadership throughout my life as well as what I specialize in, Track and Field. Showing respect towards my opponents as well as showing excellent sportsmanship has shown my leadership.

My coach Dennis McNulty always tells the team that if they become to cocky it will just make our opponents want to beat us more. He tells us to shut up and show em'. more. So I do what he tells us to do.

When off the track I occupy my time by volunteering for Student Council, NHS, and being the Vice President of Sophomore Council. I excel in track and I am very successful in my academics.

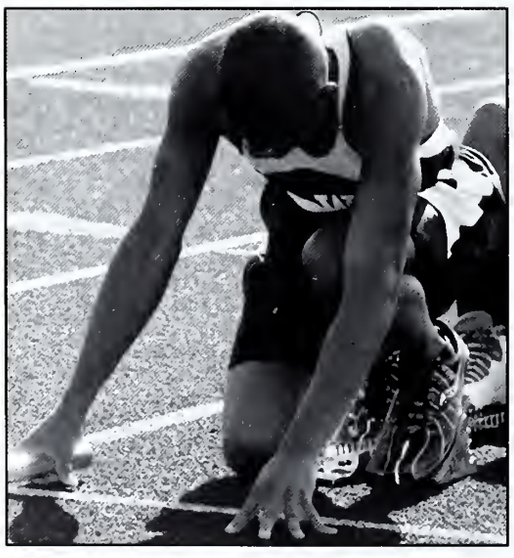
I am an honor student as well and ranked 32 in my class.Grades are very important to me because colleges don't just look at athletes for success in sports but academics as well.

Track has affected my choice in a future career and that choice is to become a Podiatrist. Pursuing a career in this field will give me the ability to help runners like myself with minor and serious injuries.



D'JUAN PARTICIPATING IN a race that was featured in the Indianapolis Star

I can help them bounce back so when it is time to compete they will be healthy and ready to give it there all. This, in my opinion, could be the greatest impact that I could have on the world.



D'JUAN PARTICIPATING IN a track meet at Warren Central.

Double Take

Hello my name is Asha and I am a twin. My twin's name is Anisha. Anisha and I are not that much different. We both like different colors, hers is purple and mine is red. Most people see differences in our face. My face is much older and my sister's face is more babyish. That's how people tell us apart. Some people expect us to act the same, sometimes we do, and sometimes we don't. We have a time when we do things a little differently, such as, if she wants to get something, and I don't like it, I will get something different. My sister and me sometimes argue, but we make up and talk. That's a little about my twin and me.

IN THE BATHROOM, after Asha preps her hair, Anisha decides to take a picture.

Asha and I are a lot different, and we do different things like wear different clothes. When we wear different clothes people can tell us apart. I don't know if people expect Asha and me to act the same. When my sister and I are in public people see us and ask us if we are twins, and I tell them yeah. When we were small we looked just alike, but I don't think we look alike anymore. What makes us different is that I don't like wearing the same clothes any more. Asha and I will sometimes do things together like go to the mall. Every time we leave, we always end up doing something fun. My sister and I sometimes fight over the dumbest things, but other than that Asha and I get along with each other.

My Impact

Katie Scott

In October, I traveled with 40 youth group members and several adults to the gulf coast to help families in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. The first day we arrived, we were set to work.

Once we stepped off the vans onto the dead and dying grass and looked at the thrashed homes of two families, we knew what our work would entail. In our three days of working, everyone worked hard to accomplish the most they could. When the workday was over, nearly everyone walked into the church, changed out of the filthy, mildewed clothes, and plopped our sore tired bodies down onto air mattresses.

On the third day, we were working on a Baptist church and during a lunch break, I scanned the area and noticed in the far corner of the once there church and saw about six rows of what dangled in front of me, I went for the bait. I went straight to the corner and started knocking off the unnecessary baggage. As I did so, I heard my youth pastor yell "leave it on the court" which was our motivational phrase and praise that we heard when we working strenuously.

First, a couple people around me stopped to ask me if I was into baseball because as I was knocking out these cemented bricks. Once I had reached the last row my arm muscles were so shot that several times when I swung, the sledgehammer slid out of my hand, but I continued.

Once I got to the last brick and knocked it out, ease slid over me and I received many pats on the back, which made it difficult to stand straight. Then I received a nickname, which has stuck with me since then: Sledge. I perceive it as my self-less moment. Work as hard as you can and then a bit more, and to me, that is leadership.

VERY BUSY, HERE are people getting straight to work on helping clean up the disaster from Hurricane Katrina at what once was a Baptist church.

AFTER AFFECTS OF Hurricane Katrina left many homes where the hurricane touched looking like a disaster,like this home.

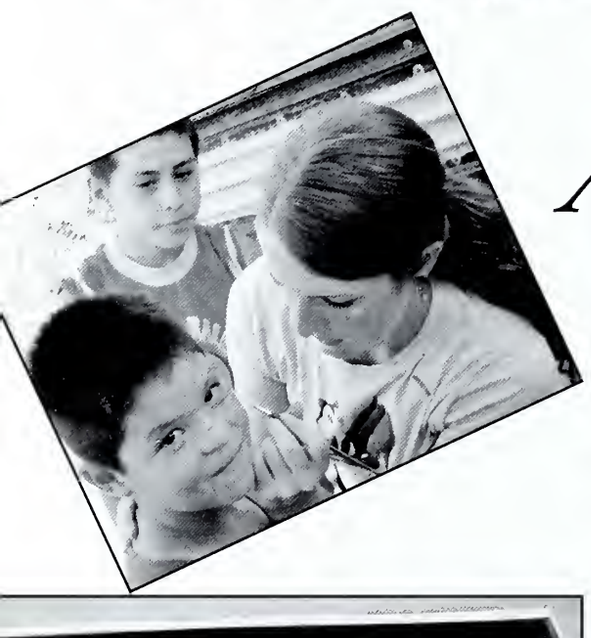
My Alyssa Dewing Impact



Above: The final night Armour Ministries did an outreach to the community with food, face painting, and music. During the outreach Alyssa's task was helping paint the kids faces.
Below: Both groups ended the trip with two houses for two lucky families. This was the first time Brookville Road church went to Mexico to build houses.
Right: Alyssa Dewing bonds with the hopeful children of Mexico. This little girl and her family were one of the fortunate to receive a house.

Over this past summer in 2005, I was provided with the opportunity to go on a missions trip to Mexico, with an organization headed up by Armor Ministries. This experience for me was nothing short of amazing.

On this missions trip, we built two houses for two families; we accomplished this by dividing up into two groups with each group building one house. For about a week, this was what our schedule consisted of: get dressed, eat, load the buses, and leave camp at about 8 a.m.; work until 1 or 2 p.m.; eat our packed lunches; then work from that point until about 6 p.m.

I never imagined how much energy and time building a simple house would take. The most exciting part of the trip was the day we dedicated the house to its new owners. Granite, the house wasn't a Hollywood mansion, but compared to the cardboard houses they were living in before, and the cardboard houses surrounded us everywhere, it might as well have been. Not only did they receieve the house but they were also given food, dishes, towels, rugs, and toys to make their new home that much more comfortable. The feeling of giving this family the simple gift of a home is truly undescribable.

The final night in Mexcio, we had an outreach to the community with food, sports, skits, face painting, and music. My task was the face painting. The simple fact of these kids being able to get their face painted provided them with enough happiness to last a lifetime. As I sat on a rock, these children were surrounding me and eagerly waiting for their chance to get their face decorated. My hand couldn't move quick enough to satisfy all of the children and soon there were still many children with their faces upainted. Looking at these childrens faces full of hope made my heart melt. Just one more kid I kept telling myself because it was impossible for me to turn the next child down.

As I sat on the bus, staring at the children with so little, this Mexican girl, whom I had befriended, reached up to the bus window, and gave me a bracelet. I was completely awed. As the bus started pulling away, I reached out and gave her a necklace that I had gotten years ago. This memory of all these beautiful children with so much hope is the reason why I am considering minsitry as a possible career. I was so changed, that I have decided to go on another missions trip to Brazil this year.

Double Take

Katie McLaren

Being twins is CRAZY. One time I was sitting across the table from Annie and I said, "Annie, can you hand me..." and I did not even finish my sentence and she just reached over and handed me exactly what I wanted. That pretty much sums up what being twins is all about. People think that only identical twins have "ESP" but Annie and I have something close to that, even though we look different.

When you have a twin you have a built in buddy who is always there when you are bored. It's much harder to get lonely, but it also has its downsides. You have to share everything, including a birthday.

Even though being around one person ALL the time can get annoying, after awhile you just get used to it. Being a twin is different from anything that someone who is not a twin could ever imagine. It's so close to having a best friend that you know so well you feel like you can read their mind, only intensified. Your twin is the person you know the best out of anyone in the world.

At 8 weeks.

Age 4 while on vacation at Gulf Shores, Alabama

Annie McLaren

Being a twin is pretty crazy. Katie and I have our own language that we call "McLarenese" and we drive our friends crazy talking in it. It's mostly based on experiences we've had, people we've met and word's we've made up.

We look nothing alike (except for maybe our eye shape, or so we have been told, because I look just like my dad and Katie looks just like my mom), but we still get called each other's names by people we have known for 10 years. We can sometimes switch places in class and teachers do not notice. That's always fun.

Even though we fight about stuff sometimes, we usually forget what we were fighting about before long and are friends again. I never have to go places alone, and that is better when we have to go new places. I can't imagine not having a twin sister.

Brittani Oliver & Sara Smith

HOW DID YOU TWO MEET?

Brittani: Sara and I played against each other in volleyball, basketball, and softball in middle school but we didn't actually meet until freshman year at Warren at volleyball tryouts.

Sara: Brittani and I met during the summer of freshmen year.

WHAT DO YOU DO FOR FUN?

Brittani: What don't we do for fun! There's never a dull moment between us whether it's playing volleyball, going to eat (because we're fat kids), or just clowning around.

Sara: Sleepovers, parties, EATING, volleyball, and just hanging out.

HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN FRIENDS?

Brittani: Me and Sara have been friends since the summer of freshmen year.

Sara: We have been friends for three years.

WHAT DO YOU LIKE MOST ABOUT YOUR BEST FRIEND?

Brittani: I love everything about her! Although we've only known each other for a little while, we both have a BUNCH of similarities I lost my father last year and she lost hers when she was younger. Having someone actually know what your going through means more than empty apologies... we've been through everything, good and bad, and I guess what I love the most is now much of a pair we are! We relate to teach other and share the same passions.

Sara: That no matter where we go we always have fun. We are so different but alike. We laugh all the time and she just like my twin but black!

HOW DID YOU TWO MEET?

Brittany: We met each other through a mutual friend our freshmen year.

Emma: We didn't become good friends until we met again at soccer. She was the manager and I the player. I never had a dull moment on the bus rides to different schools with her sitting next me.

WHAT DO YOU DO FOR FUN?

Brittany: The list is long we've played in the indoor soccer league of WCHS together. I've done countless other activities involving soccer with her. We hang out with other friends and play word games like Outburst and Password together. We love going to the movies because we have similar interests. I've been to a few of her family gatherings, and she often attends church with me. Emma and I are two people who would like to try so man things. We both would like to take dance lessons and then we say we want to learn how to box.

Emma: We go to each others houses, go shopping, smell perfumes, go to the movies, do community projects together, talk all the time, watch cooking shows, (Brittany's fave), she cooks I watch, listen to music a lot of other things that I left out.

HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN FRIENDS?

Brittany : We have been friends for about three years now, but it seems so much longer.

Emma: Three years

WHAT DO YOU LIKE MOST ABOUT YOUR BEST FRIEND?

Brittany : Emma is the type of person who is able to make you laugh regardless of your mood. When you first meet her you would think of her its just Emma. She's always there to make me laugh and I love her for it.

Emma: Her laugh it's funny and she doesn't care if she laughs loud and sounds obnoxious (at times) it's the best laugh. She has an unrestrained laughed it's the best kind.

My Sarah Stultz Impact

My name is Sarah Stultz and I thought the perfect way to start off my junior year of high school would be to do something I would never forget. That is the reason why the first week in August I spent my time painting a school, filling bags of food for people to pick up and distribute, singing in Union Square, feeding the homeless extremly late at night, putting on a service at a homeless men's church and so much more. Normal activities that teenagers spend time doing to end their summer? No, but that is what makes me different.

I had extremely mixed emotions when I first made up my mind to go to New York City for a missions trip. I was sad to leave my friends and family but so excited for how my life was going to change by teaching kids that haven't had the same exposure to religion that I have.

I had the choice of choosing several different places in and outside of the country for my first mission trip. I chose New York because I thought it would be a good first mission trip. I got to get my feet wet by doing new things but I still felt some what in my element, or more than I would if I had left the country. I think the children I witnessed to learned a lot from me, but I think the greatest impact of all is the one the children left on my fellow missionaries and me. It was an experience I will never forget.

Posing with the entire group of children they spent the day with, Sarah and the other missionaries took a break from goofying off to get their picture taken.

In what seemed like 90 degree weather, Sarah played Ring around the Rosie in the Bronx with some less fortunate children. She as well as the other missionaries spent one whole day playing games and dancing to music with the children.

KELLY PLAYS THE bassoon during the band and orchestra concert around Christmas.

My Kelly Harrison Impact

Kelly Harrison has been a role model for many of her peers by being a dedicated bassoon player. As a member of the Honors Band and the Symphony Orchestra, Kelly has been successful in many musical competitions. She is the one of two bassoon players in the township.

In addition to the music programs she is involved in at school, Kelly is also musically active in the community. She is apart of the orchestra at her church and plays during services. Kelly has been apart of the ICC, Indianapolis Children's Choir, for nine years, and is a member of the Cantates Angeli, which is the highest choir in that program.

She says that her elementary school music teacher, Mrs. Hittle, inspired her to join the ICC, which got her interested in music. "When middle school band and choir decision came around she [Mrs. Hittle] convinced me to join band. I then started taking bassoon lessons, and I have been in love with music ever since," says Kelly. Kelly is planning on continuing her music experience throughout college by majoring in bassoon performance. She would also like to join all the music programs offered. Kelly leaves advice for the young music students under her, she says. "Keep inspiring those younger than you by practicing and constantly trying out for music opportunities outside of school. They will follow your example!"

My Matt Parkinson Impact

"Younger students are often easily influenced by older students, so it is important to help steer them in the right direction. "

Matt Parkinson has impacted his school and community by being a leader and setting a good example for fellow students to follow. He is very involved in this town of ours, participating organizations like National Honor Society, Student Council, he is senior class president, on the Principal's Advisory Board and also plays Varsity baseball.

In addition to all his school activities, Matt writes an editorial column for the Indianapolis Star. He has written on topics ranging from high school students to gay issues. Matt also gives back to the community by doing community service with the different organizations he is involved in.

He said that the main reason he feels it is so important to be involved with school is because he wants to give back to a place that has done so much for him. As a major leader in the school many students look up to him, and he feels that it is very important to be a positive role model for them.

"Younger students are often easily influenced by older students, so it is important to help steer them in the right direction," said Matt.

As a graduating senior, Matt is looking forward to being involved in organizations the like Student Government at Indiana University next year and continuing be the leader he has become.

Matt's advice to the younger leaders for incoming classes is, "As you get older more people watch everything you do, so be sure to set a good example."

A sense of superiority

Matt Parkinson
Warren Central High School

Following Fresh Thoughts writer Tyler Armao's item about President Bush last Friday, an interesting online debate ensued about acquiring wisdom with age. Mixed in with the debate, however, was a sense of intellectual superiority that older generations frequently like to hold over the heads of young people.

It was argued by one person that with "more life experience and exposure to a broader range of experiences, you have a much better understanding of the complexities of this journey we call life." Tyler was then chided for his lack of understanding.

Other comments about the article by different critics spoke to t same effect.

I certainly don't agree with Tyler's premise, but his argument are valid. The idea that his lack of life experience and age prevented him from formulating a solid opinion is narrow-minded. Please, adults, even if you disagree with a young person's ideas, don't dismiss our arguments as inferior due simply to our age.

Senior class

To the Class of 2006,
Michael Jordan once said, "I've missed more than 9,000 shots in my career. I've lost almost 300 games. Twenty-six times, I've been trusted to make the game winning shot and missed. I've failed over and over again in my life. And that is why I succeed."

You are all leaving and going out into the real world, to work, to school, to the military. You are going to face many challenges and changes. You will have a choice each day about how you are going to approach life: you can choose to avoid difficult situations and give up when the going gets tough, or you can face life with a positive attitude and see your yourselves as winners because you "give it your best shot." I know the Class of 2006 will face the future with the same positive attitude that you displayed here at Warren and continue to succeed.

It has truly been my pleasure to be your Senior Advisor. The memories of good times shared with the Class of 2006 will make me smile for years to come. You guys will be a tough act to follow. Good luck and my very best to each of you.

A very special thanks to the Class Officers for all of your hard work. Your leadership and commitment were the keys to a successful year. I'll miss our times in the Senior Office.

Love,
Ms. Widgren
WC C/O 1965

The Class of 2006 would like to thank Ms. Widgren for her commitment to our school and to the senior class. Often her actions go unseen and unappreciated, but without her dedication, our senior year would not have been the same. For all that she does, Ms. Widgren is more than just the senior class adviser; she's closer to the "Senior Class Mom."

On top of the planning and organization of the annual senior events, Ms. Widgren makes a genuine effort to get to know as many seniors as possible. Her dedication to knowing students personally and her devotion to giving every student the opportunity to enjoy his or her senior year are unmatched.

Ms. Widgren,

We love you and value all you do for us. From all the seniors and the class officers: THANK YOU!

To my Wonderful Daughter:

A mixture of thoughts and emotions
Clutter my mind as we work through this hectic phase.
I feel a mingling of concern, happiness, and pride,
Over the major challenges you'll encounter in future days.

Through the years I've watched you grow and blossom
Into the lovely young lady you are today.
It is exciting and sad at the same time
To know that you'll soon be on your way.

I'll always treasure the memories of your childhood
And the close relationship we have grown to share.
But I totally support the many adventures and opportunities
Awaiting for you at college and beyond as you venture forth out there.

I'll always be there for you. Good luck and God bless.

Our son,
A special little boy God gave us one day,
You were placed into our arms for us to lead your way.
The love we had for you right from the very start,
Has grown so much and now completely fills our hearts.
Our lives have had some laughter,
We've had our share of tears.
But God has given each their place,
With the passing of the years.
You stand before us now and its hard to understand,
How God has turned our little boy into a fine young man.
But this one thing remember as you open each new door,
That as much as we do love you John...
God still loves you more.

Good luck and Bless you

We have watched you grow from a curly blonde haired, blue eyed girl to a fine young lady, these have been incredible moments.

You were born in beautiful Heidelberg, Germany, where you spent your early years. Georgia then claimed you as a "sweet Georgia peach." Missouri taught you to say "Show me." Now Indiana has completed your education to this point.

You've made us happy and we are so proud of you, from how you treat people to never accepting defeat. As you begin the next chapter of your life, continue to be strong with your values and beliefs.

You were so full of life, always smiling and carefree,
Life loved you being a part of it, and I loved you being a part of me,
You could make anyone laugh, if they were having a bad day,
No matter how sad I was, you could take the hurt away.
Nothing could ever stop you, or even make you fall,
You were ready to take on the world, ready to do it all.
But God decided he needed you, so from this world you left,
But you took a piece of all of us, our hearts are what you kept.
Your seat is now empty, and its hard not to see your face,
But please always know this, no one will ever take your place.
You left without a warning, not even saying good-bye,
And I can't seem to stop, asking the quesion why?
Nothing will ever be the same, the halls are empty without your laughter,
But I know you're in Heaven, watching over us and looking after.
I didn't see this coming, it hit me by suprise,
And when you left this world, a small part of me died.
Your smile could brighten anyone's day, no matter what they were going through,
And I know everyday for the rest of my life, I'll be missing you.

I would like to thank Warren Central Staff and Students for all the outpour of love and support shown to Cortni L. Hopkins "Rocky" and Family. May God Bless you.

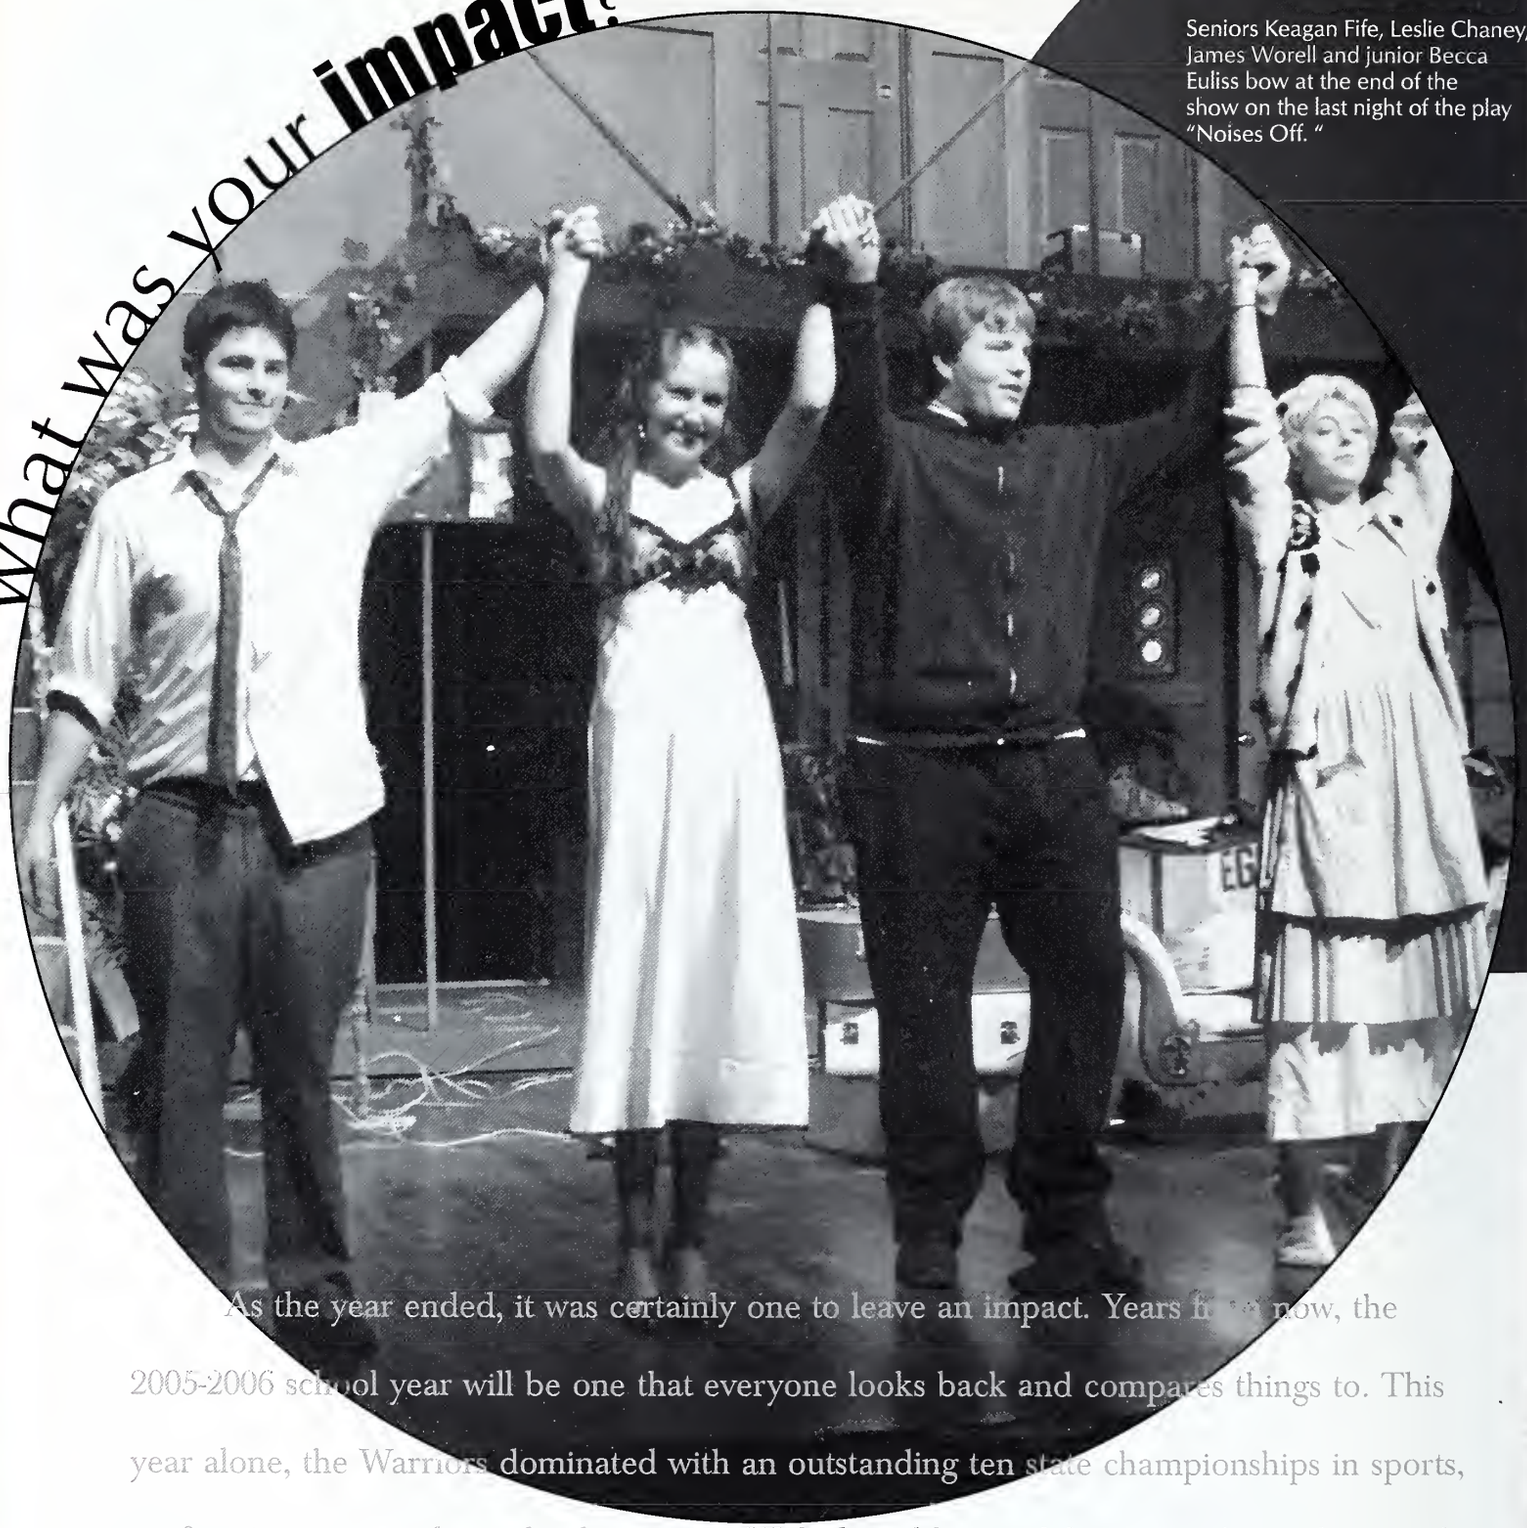
what was your impact?



Seniors Keagan Fife, Leslie Chaney, James Worell and junior Becca Euliss bow at the end of the show on the last night of the play "Noises Off. "

As the year ended, it was certainly one to leave an impact. Years from now, the 2005-2006 school year will be one that everyone looks back and compares things to. This year alone, the Warriors dominated with an outstanding ten state championships in sports, performing arts, media and culinary arts. With the addition of the new cafeteria lines and the addition of Outakes, lunch was a whole new experience. Many changes, including several high points and several devastations held the school year together and the student body always ended up coming out strong on top. Students, teachers and adminstrators all left their impact in one way or another. What was your impact?

700 copies of the 69th volume of the Wigwam were printed by Herff Jones. Yearbooks were sold at an "early-bird" price of $40, a regular price of $45 and a final price of $50 in the late sale. Cathy Wines was the Herff Jones representative. Mark Haab served as the yearbook advisor and Publication director. Tony Burchett was the principal. Jessica Allen served as yearbook editor-in-chief; Sarah Candler and Ashlee Harley were the co-associate editors. The book was printed on 80 pound matte paper and all page layouts were created with Adobe InDesign and Photoshop software and designed by the Wigwam Staff using Macintosh G4 and eMac computers. This was the first year senior pictures were printed in color and a limited number of senior ads were offered in color.

Photography-

Most photos were taken by staff photographers using a Nikon D100, Minolta Dimage 7, and Nikon Coolpix 5700. Prestige, our official school photographer, provided sports group pictures and some special event coverage.

Typography-

Headline fonts were from the Garamond family. Accent fonts were from the Impact family. Caption font was from the Opus family, 9 point and body copy was set in the Garamond family, 10 point.

Cover-

The initial cover was designed by the editors and staff members who attended Ball State's summer workshop. Although the design was changed several times, the staff finally agreed on a cover that was simple and modern yet had an impact. Pantone 326 C and Pantone 720 C were used on the cover and endsheets.

Workshops-

Students attended Ball State Summer Workshops, Ball State's J-Day, and the JEA/NSPA National Convention in Chicago. The staff also attended the Indiana High School Press Association State Convention at Franklin College.
